RATS IN WASHINGTON.
 The Capital City Is Badly Overrun with the Troublesome and Destructive Rodents.
 Notwithstanding the fact that Washington is said to be the cleanest city on the American continent, says a Washington special to the New York Tribune, a census of rats would show that the national capital has about as many of these pests as any sister city. It is said that the conditions here are peculiarly adapted to the preservation of rodents, and there are merchants around the Center market who are willing to make affidavit that there are rats in that vicinity fully 20 years old and which have escaped and thwarted every known effort to exterminate them.
 As is known, the rat probably has more out-and-out enemies than any other animal on earth. Its persecutors, animate and inanimate, come in the form of poison, traps, cats, dogs, birds, ferrets and men. Some or all of these agencies are at work constantly, and yet the Washington rat thrives, waxes fat and raises a large family. Rats are repulsive at best and nearly everybody is afraid of them, especially the great gray fellows which seem to have taken possession of some parts of the city. These monster rodents put up a bold fight when cornered, and they are sharp-toothed, keen-eyed creatures.
 The rat is by nature a true gamin—sharp, cunning and, when necessity requires, bold and fearless, fighting men and dogs alike. There is no question that the Norway or wharf rat—the big gray one—drove off and killed the small black rat which was common throughout the United States two decades ago.
 When a rat is attacked he will first make a break to scamper out of the way of his enemy, but if he sees that successful retreat is out of the question, then he boldly and defiantly tries to put up a winning fight for freedom and liberty. Rats have been known to attack human beings in many instances where they were not first assailed. Large rats are often rendered bold through force of numbers and hungry through enforced abstinence.
 And, too, the large gray rat is a cannibal; the male rat will not hesitate when hungry to make a meal off his young. This, however, he never does without first having a battle with the mother rat, who always fights for her babies. It is only the male rat which is given to cannibalism. A Louisiana animal commission man says that about the fiercest battle he ever witnessed between animals was a few weeks ago when he saw an old gray rat kill a young one. The mother rat interfered and for 15 minutes the two rodents engaged in a combat which for ferocity would rival almost anything ever seen in the arena. They fought until weak and exhausted from many wounds and then were dispatched.
 It's usually the man who doesn't believe in love who has the hardest attack when he catches the fever.—Chicago
Ten Years in Bed
 R. A. Gray, J. P., Oakville, Ind., writes, "For ten years I was confined to my bed with disease of my kidneys. It was so severe that I could not move part of the time.
