stead of his Majesty. The third resolution... After some discussion, Mr. J. P. Green rose...

It is quite evident that these gatherings are encouraged by certain parties who are bent on creating disorder. It was very impolitic to call a meeting for the object for which this was convened...

The War Department.

The revolt of the troops on Sunday last at the barracks is perhaps a most fortunate occurrence, in that it shows how unaided to our circumstances is the military arm of the public service...

This done, two things should follow: Either a military code should be adopted sufficiently effective to ensure obedience from the soldiery, which might then be enlisted; or we must rely on a strong police force, backed with two well-equipped volunteer companies...

All our citizens have an interest in this matter, and now appears to be the time to initiate a reform, in what has been looked upon as a farce. Dismiss the military, and trust to the people for that protection which they are fully capable of affording...

The Date Tree.

Why is it that the date palm is not planted here like it is? There are very few of these trees bearing fruit at these islands. We have two near our residence in School street, one of which is a male and the other a female, which are about twenty years old...

Sensible Ideas.

The San Jose Mercury, in replying to the inquiry of one of its correspondents, as to whether it favored Chinese immigration, gives utterance to the following naive sentiments, which, however they may differ from the narrow ideas of the Chinese-baters in California...

Another Rowdy Gathering.

A political meeting was held on Monday evening at Kamaekapihi Church, of the same general stamp as the late gatherings to which we have referred. The object was to discuss the succession to the throne. A series of resolutions was brought in, the first of which declared that the King was very sick. The second called for a committee to wait on him, and request him to name a successor...

rates. China can spare a hundred millions of her redundant population, who do not now earn a penny a day at home, and then have enough to till her soil to better advantage than now. We firmly believe it to be the destiny of Providence to give people the hundred thousand islands of the Pacific world with all the laborers wanted.

Fiji.

Our advices from Fiji, via the Colonies, are to about June 1st. The native parliament had closed its session, and the government appears to have had things pretty much its own way, as the presence of an English war vessel and the determined attitude of its Commander, kept the malcontents, among the foreign population quiet.

A Valuable Island.

An English company has recently purchased the island of Santa Catalina, located a little above San Diego, California, a spot which may be of our sea-faring friends are familiar with. The enormous sum of $3,750,000 is said to have been paid for it. Heretofore it has been known chiefly as an extensive sheep run.

The French Republic.

Has paid off the entire national debt, and Germany—one thousand millions of dollars—and the German armies have withdrawn from her territory. It is doubtful whether any other nation has ever undertaken to raise and pay off so great a foreign claim in so short a time.

A Live Boston Newspaper.

Boston, like London, has the reputation of clinging to old fashions and old ways of doing things. In nothing is this more apparent than in its daily papers, most of which remain what they were thirty years ago, save in size and improved typography. While New York, Chicago, and other representative cities have introduced the progressive eight page form, Boston has, until lately, defied all such innovations...

Can it be Enforced?

The Old Bay State seems to have a great deal of trouble in carrying out her local prohibitory law. For instance, we read, as follows: "On Saturday afternoon, July 26, the State constables, assisted by local officers, visited a large number of saloons in Worcester, where Schenck's beer was sold, and seized all that could be found. Most of the saloons visited were kept by Germans who had already been twice arraigned for dealing in the article, but their stock had never before been taken. Immediately after the seizure, some of the saloon keepers got in a new stock, and a second seizure was made. In the evening nearly all of the saloons were open and doing business until their stock was exhausted."

The London Times, speaking of the drinking custom of the age, writes thus forcibly:—"The world cannot be governed by absolute ideas. That there is a great evil among us is patent to all men. It is eating away the life of the people. It is not to be met by any declamation against intemperance. But philanthropists, and even economists, regard its existence as a national danger as well as a public loss. To arrest it in some way or other is an obvious duty, not from any logical standpoint such as would satisfy the teetotaler, but because it is found to be a source of misery and wretchedness to a great mass of the people. It is found that every low public-house has its surrounding of drunkenness; that an increase of such public-houses multiplies the number of drunkards; that in every neighborhood where a house of this description is established it demoralizes a section of the people; that the inducements offered to consumption daily and hourly destroy the lives of men; that every newspaper shows a victim; that every good delivery shows a criminal, who has been made so by the fatal error. It, therefore, becomes necessary to do something. No man has yet propounded an effectual remedy. But it is thought that by stopping the multiplication of public-houses, and by suppressing those that are manifestly unfit, this will be promoted. Men who discard logic as an absolute guide are therefore prepared to acquiesce in some such measure. They say the evil is so terrible, and increasing so fast, that it must be arrested. If there is no other way of stopping a fire it must be done by a barrel of gunpowder under the adjoining premises. It is a bad thing to interfere with men's liberty, or to adopt doubtful principles in government, but it is so sad to see men dying by hundreds and thousands from drunkenness, that something must be done; if by confiscation it must be done; if by compensation, it must be done; if by creating something which assumes the character of a monopoly, it must be done. The world has pronounced the evil to be intolerable. This is the state of the question at the present moment in England, and next session the Parliament will be occupied in discussing it."
