The Origin of the Chinese Pigtail.
(From the London Globe.)
A recent Imperial edict on the subject calls our attention to the origin of the pigtail, which is now the distinctive mark of a native of the Flowery Land. It is one of the strange phenomena of that country, where everything is so ancient, and where so few innovations have been tolerated, that this practice, which was originally the badge of conquest, should have been not merely accepted, but permitted to intertwine itself so closely with the national life that it would now require forcible measures to induce the people to forego it. For in the days before the Manchu conquest, when the throne was occupied by the great dynasties of antiquity, the Chinese allowed their hair to grow as best it pleased them; and they were even known to some of their neighbors as the "Long-haired race." But when the great soldier Nurhachu marched southwards from Moukden to conquer China, and establish the Manchu dynasty, he gave an order to his lieutenants to compel the people, as they submitted, to shave their heads in token of their subser-vitude. The Manchu was thus enabled to discover at a glance which of the Chinese were vanquished, and which were not; while the thoroughness of their success was expressed in the most formal and emphatic manner.
This practice, which was adopted partly from the exigencies arising out of the conquest of the multitudinous of China by a mere handful of Tatar soldiers, was continued, and became an integral portion of the Manchu system of government, and the result has tended to confirm the wisdom of the founders of the present dynasty. The popular views on the subject of the pigtail have not yet been ascertained with any degree of certitude; but it may be remarked that all the insurrections of the last twenty years have put forward, as one of their features, the intention to renew its practice, which has therefore been represented as a badge of conquest. There now, however, seems more chance than ever of its perpetuation.
