A large number of Chinese went to the Mail dock to see the Alexandrine last evening. They seem to take a great interest in the vessel, probably on account of the fact that she is going to the scene of the war.

W. T. Monsarrat, who left here some weeks ago, was, at last accounts laid up at Salt Lake City, Utah, with inflammatory rheumatism. He was, however, convalescent, and hoped to be well in a short time.

The Hawaiian Hardware Company predict a boon for the country, and, in the meantime, they have a few Hendry breakers that they would like to dispose of in order to make room for a large money safe.

A number of people are under the impression that the Volcano is not in an active condition at present. Peter Lee is the authority for the statement that the crater is more active now than it has been since the cave in some weeks ago.

Mr. D. D. Baldwin, of Maui, recently discovered a new species of land shell at Honomano, Maui. It is a tree shell, white with handsome black and brown bands encircling the larger whorls. Mr. Baldwin has named it Achatinella Dolei, in honor of the first President of the Republic.

TWO JAPANESE CARICATURES.

Quaint Ideas of a Noted Wielder of the Pencil.

LI HUNG CHANG GETS A JOLT.

Naturally, the Japanese have the Best of It in the Victorial Efforts of the Mikado's Subjects—Wrestling Over the Map of Korea.

Japanese artists for many hundreds of years have devoted much study to caricature. This is seen in their metal work, pottery decoration, ivory carvings and paintings, but in these the subjects have seldom been celebrities contemporary with the work. Caricaturing as understood in the Western world is a form of art the Japanese have recently practiced with much enthusiasm. Events of great political and social importance engage the pencil and brush of the artists of Japan. The two illustrations given today are from original drawings made for the New York Sun by Teijokuro Morimoto, an eminent Japanese artist who recently stopped in New York on his way to Europe.

In one cartoon the war is represented by a wrestling match, Japanese style, between the Chinese Viceroy, Li Hung Chang, and the Japanese Prime Minister, Count Ito. The contest is taking place in a pavilion, roofed, on the right, by the naval flag of Japan, draped over the Japanese sailors and ships, and on the left by the dragon flag of China, beneath which are arranged the men and ships of Korea. The flags are caught in the center by Korea's coat of arms. The wrestlers are standing on a map of Korea, and in that map are indicated the harbors, principle cities and rivers of Korea. The city indicated on the map, just in front of Li's left foot, is Seoul, and the name of the city is written in Japanese characters beneath. The little chap who is feeling his head, as if he had bumped it hard when he was thrown down, is the King of Korea.

The patriotic sympathy of the artist is shown in the condition of the Japanese ships, steady and strong looking, as compared to the tumble down appearance of the ships of China. In this picture, as in the other, the principal figures are represented in bathing costume, which may be the artist's way of indicating that the number of ships that are to be sunk in this war will make such costumes appropriate.

NAVAL SEE-SAW—LI HUNG CHANG GETS A JOLT. (The idea of a Japanese.)

In the see-saw picture Li Hung Chang is encountering another Ito, the Admiral of that name. The Japanese has hoisted the Chinese ship with such violence that Li is suffering great distress. The figures circled around the see-saw represent the European nations. In each figure the decoration on the costume indicates the nation, and it is interesting to note the race characteristics as expressed by a Japanese. The unhappy little figure in the center of the see-saw represents Korea.

Cypress never decays under water. Dust will find its way where water cannot penetrate.

There are from two to five burials a day in Potter's field of New York city.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVERTISER of August 28th I noticed that E. W. Barnard of Laupahoehoe, had received some very flattering and encouraging returns in regard to the shipment of coffee that he had sent to San Francisco. Now as I was passing through Laupahoehoe I took occasion to look over this coffee grove, and was delighted to find one of the most favored spots that I have yet seen for the raising of coffee. This coffee grove I found was situated some distance up the Laupahoehoe gulch, and was surrounded by some of the most gorgeous tropical vegetation and well sheltered from the wind, and seems to be the real home for the coffee plant.

The coffee here I am glad to say looks just as rich and luxuriant as the vegetation which surrounds it, and as it is of various growth from the young plant to the full bearing tree it presents a most beautiful sight, and gives evidences of some rich returns in the near future. I found this coffee scattered about among the most favored spots and generally in the most sheltered places, the largest piece being twenty acres, and the total number planted to coffee being thirty-two acres. Besides the coffee, however, Mr. Barnard has quite a number of other choice trees the whole place presenting a most pleasing appearance.

I find that this coffee-raising is a most interesting study, and I should judge from the present appearance of things it is very likely to be a most profitable one as well. But I must say that these trees require considerably more care than is generally supposed. In the first place it is evidently of the utmost importance to get a good location, or nothing but failure can be expected. I also understand that these trees, after they are two years old, require constant attention. I find that the first branches that are given out are called primary branches, and bear but once; then comes the secondary branch, which grows off the primary branch, and which bears but once; and the general process or growth of the tree seems to consist in sending out new secondary branches, and the care consists in keeping the tree from doing nothing else. For I learn that this coffee tree is very ambitious to grow away up in the air, which is not allowed, and to send out tertiary branches, or branches which grow off the secondary branches, and act in a most obstinate manner generally. But I presume that it is on account of the great care that Mr. Barnard gives to his trees, which accounts for his success. I should say, also, that the coffee tree is more beautiful than is generally supposed, and more rich in hue and graceful in form than is generally supposed, and this is more particularly the case when the tree is in bearing and covered with bright crimson berries. GEO. OSBORNE.
