HANALEI, KAUI.

Inscribed to Miss Frances Johnson.

Oh! vale of enchantment and beauty, by the waves of an amethyst sea With its blossoms of foam on the beaches, that leap and rejoice in their glee;

I see thee again in my fancy, looking back as a dreamer of dreams, On the ramparts green-swathed that engird these adrip with the rippling of streams.

From the heart of the woodland the river ripples on through the sweet scented bowers, Neath roofs of the forest in gloamings of green trailed o'er with lianas and flowers,

Long groves of kukui and koa, and ohias aflame with their bloom,— The torch of the fiery lele droopeth down from the arch of the gloom.

I wander again in my fancy by Waloii, the water that sings, Mine eyes are in rapture uplifted to the heights where all blossoming things

Have enveloped the rocks in a garment of crimson and purple and gold, Botted down from their ultimate peaks to their feet in the far wooded fold.

Oh! to ramble again through the woodlands where bells of coucouill swing, Where the shade for a moment is lit by the flash of the tropic bird's wing.

Oh! to tread 'mid the drifting of blossoms, and wade 'mid the wastes of the bloom, Or to lie on the couches of moss and inhale the sweet jasmine's perfume.

The wind from the sea as a harper, sweeps the chords of the woods as a lyre, The birds in their happiness piping, and the rivulets join in the choir;

The brooks, and the birds, and the winds, sing the songs that we never may know, Yet the melodies linger and charm, as they did in the long ago.

Oh! to float on the river's broad bosom, to loiter by dreamy alcoves, Where the arrows of Sunshine are powerless to pierce through the roofs of the groves;

To drift with the slow moving current 'twixt mossy margins embroidered with flowers, The world around me forgotten, and unheeded pass by me the hours.

From Princeville's green slopes to the eastward, I look down on the waters sun-kissed, The peaks and the spires of the ramparts are adrift in a tremulous mist.

With the splendor of rainbow enwoven, as they shimmer and shine in the light That the Sun in his glory descending hath left on the fringes of night.

Oh! valley no words can describe thee, all the pigments on palettes are tame, So portray the rich splendor of color, for the fires of the greens and the flame

Where Spring never falleth, Summer remains, frost never blossoms benumb, Paralyze the weak hand of the painter, the lips of the poet strike dumb.
