They will not be subject to extradition unless for crimes committed in Mexico without reference to military duty.

The fugitives will be kept under surveillance and expected to refrain from further hostilities during their stay in the United States.

They had arranged with the artillerymen quartered inside the walls to join in the movement, but the gunners failed to keep their promise. General Chi Mien was warned of the plot. He permitted the city gates to be opened, as had been arranged by the conspirators, and a body of mutineers numbering fifty, who were to seize important points were admitted and immediately shot down. General Mena's surrender is taken to indicate the collapse of the revolution. His removal to Panama probably means exile.

Officials here believed General Mena requested that he be permitted to surrender to Admiral Southerland, from fear of strong action at the hands of the Nicaraguan federalists, and the admiral doubtless thought it advisable to get the rebel chief out of the country as soon as possible.
