

ROME, ONCE THE WORLD'S MISTRESS

Rev. J. W. Potter of Trinity Church Tells of Sojourn Through Italy and Writes With Interest.

AND WICKED POMPEII

Writer Says if Ever a City Was Destroyed for Its Vast Sinning That Was The One.

Rev. J. W. Potter's letters, which have appeared from time to time in the Muscatine Journal and have proved of no little interest locally, tell of the extensive travels of the Keokuk minister. In a recent issue of the upriver paper, Doctor Potter's visit to Rome is told in the following manner:

Landings at Brindisi, Italy, we took train for Naples. It is an all day's run, and as they provide no dining car, we took lunches on the train and made ourselves comfortable. We were to spend ten days in this sun-kissed land and knew beforehand that they would of necessity be strenuous days if we caught even a glimpse of the historic ruins and present beauty. While at Naples we visited Pompeii and walked through those streets, only recently uncovered, where once Roman pomp and pleasure held high carnival. They are still excavating and each day brings to light something which hasn't been seen the sun for nearly 2,000 years. Old Pompeii—wicked, sensual, pleasure mad. If a city was ever destroyed because of its sin—that city was Pompeii. Some of the party climbed Old Vesuvius—it's a hard proposition, since the eruption four years ago destroyed the cog-road.

The bay of Naples is beautiful and when her waters are illuminated by light from ship and shore, the scene can never be forgotten. I do not sympathize in any degree with the gentleman who said "See Naples and die," as though there were nothing worth while after that. No, no. See Naples, but see her quick and then go on to Rome—that's my advice.

Historic, masterful, interesting Rome. There is only one other city in the world that has the same or equal historic interest to me, and that is Jerusalem. Rome was once the mistress of the world, for Julius Caesar brought to pass the only universal empire the world has ever known.

We visited the old Forum. It is now a sunken square and has little beauty or charm save for its historic interest.

The traveler is held by a strange fascination when he remembers that here were presented some of the world's most stupendous dramas; generals, consuls and emperors were the actors, while all the world made up the audience.

Here the Romans were framing laws and working out the problems of political government, while savages still roamed over the present site of Paris, France.

Nearby is the place where the golden milepost stood, from which distance was reckoned to all parts of the empire.

Running east from the Forum lies the Sacred Way. This was the most fashionable street of the ancient city and was to Rome what Broadway is to New York. Passing down this ancient way you come to the Arch of Titus, which, after the lapse of 18 centuries ranks as one of the grandest ruins of imperial Rome. It was erected to commemorate the taking of Jerusalem by Titus.

At the east end of the Sacred Way stands the Coliseum, the greatest ruins of the city. It was commenced by Vespasian and completed by Titus and so has stood the shock of time for nearly 2,000 years. It would seat 87,000 people and at its dedication, which lasted 100 days 5,000 wild beasts were killed for the amusement of the people.

Near the Coliseum stands the Arch of Constantine, built 330 A. D. or just fifteen years before the emperor whose name it bears, moved his capital and official residence from Rome to the city by the Bosphorus on the Golden Horn.

There are 28 public fountains in the city beside 300 watering troughs. The system of waterworks furnishes the population 110 gallons per capita daily, thus making Rome the best watered capital city in the world.

The most famous and popular fountain is "Trevi." It was brought to the city by Marcus Arippa, 20 years B. C.

When Rome was swept by the barbarians in the 5th century this conduit was broken and its flow stopped for nearly a thousand years. But in 1560 Pope Pius IV caused it to be repaired and it has flowed unceasingly to the present day.

Taking the Applan Way—"The Queen of Roads" (and such it might be called, for it was a great government highway 290 miles in length and kept in perfect condition.) we pass the little church of "Quo Vadis" on our way to the Catacombs of St. Calixtus. Here, during the times of early persecution the Christians opened great hallways and chapels underground and not only held religious services but also buried their dead in the secret place. It is said on authority, that 14 popes and 170,000 Christians were buried here.

Returning to the city we visit the prison of St. Paul the church of St. Peter in chains, the sacred stairway and come at last to St. Peter's, the greatest Christian church in the world.

Everything here is on a gigantic scale—the open space in front, the circling colonnade, the mighty dome, the historic monolith, which stands in the center of the great conception and masterful execution of design. The building is 600 feet long and 323 feet wide, while the dome is 440 feet high. But, wonderful and imposing as is the exterior, its chief glory is within. You might liken the interior to a city. The streets are marble, the sky is gold, there are 44 altars of worship, 39 statues and 748 columns. There are over 30 confessionals, in 17 different languages, so that a visitor from almost any part of the world may here confess his sin in his own tongue.

Everywhere you turn there are the tombs of the popes, 132 of whom sleep within these sacred walls. Underneath the great central dome there is a bronze canopy supported by four spiral bronze columns and standing about 100 feet high; surmounted by a cross of gold. Under this canopy is the tomb of St. Peter. The dome was painted by the hand of that masterful genius Michael Angelo. St. Peter's cost over $50,000,000 and it takes an annual expenditure of nearly $50,000 to keep it in good repair.

The Vatican, which stands adjoining, is the official residence of the pope and the largest palace in the world. It contains 1100 rooms and 22 court yards. It is well fortified and could withstand quite a siege. Its galleries and museum contain some of the rarest art treasures of the world.

The Sistine chapel is justly celebrated for its great painting, "The Last Judgement," by Michael Angelo. Leaving Rome, we went to Florence. This was the native city of the poet Dante. Near her Milton wrote his immortal "Paradise Lost," and within the corporate limits of the town Savonarola not only taught and charmed the populus by his ministry, but gave up his life in the public square—for he was publicly burned at the stake.

Michael Angelo and Guido Reni also wrought and labored here and here about. Indeed Florence was the "storm center" for the revival of learning and the awakening of the arts from their sleep of centuries. The city lies in a beautiful pocket-valley on both sides of the Arno river. Bridges, quaint and curious as well as strong and modern, span the waters of the winding river, while all about the city stand the mountains keeping watch over all. The whole setting of the picture is calculated to inspire the poetic fancy and stir the soul to lofty endeavor. One of our party asked a gentleman of the town if they had any factories in the city, and you should have seen the pride with which he drew himself up and replied: No sir, no factories here; Florence is devoted to art.

And so the galleries are filled with the productions of the masters, and the stores and shops are filled with modern copies, in marble and on canvas, which they offer for sale. Florence produces the finest quality of inlaid work, made of stone, that the world has ever seen. There is a table of this kind of work in the Pitti gallery valued at $50,000.

All in all, Florence was one of the most attractive and interesting places we visited on our return trip. Our next stop was Venice. Here we had the unique experience of being taken from the train in gondolas, and to the tune of the plash of the gondolier's oar, made our way through the liquid streets of the city to "The Luna Hotel." Venice is an island city, builded upon 120 islands about two miles from the main land. The great bridge which connects the city with the mainland has 222 arches and is a fine structure.

The streets being water, the chief means of transportation for goods and men is by boat. Of these there are over 1,000 in constant use, beside the steam tugs which regularly ply the waters of the grand canal.

Perhaps the chief attraction of the city is the Cathedral of imposing size. It dates back to 830 A. D. and has had a varied and interesting history. One feature which sets it apart from every other cathedral I have ever seen is its floor. Not level like the ordinary floor of a house, but wavy like the surface of the sea. You get almost seasick walking through its spacious length.

One evening we hired a gondola for a pleasure ride, and the experience can never be forgotten. The gondolier, standing in the rear of the graceful boat and propelling and guiding it with one oar, rowed us into the Grand canal, and after perhaps half an hour, rowed us alongside a large and beautifully decorated and illuminated boat in which a happy party of musicians, with piano, violin, mandolin, guitar and tambourine, were making merry. They sang and played and the melody of their music was carried far over the waters, until a great crowd of boats drew near—and then, the free concert over, they passed the hat—and we went on our way.

The scene must be witnessed to be appreciated. The lighted lamps on the boats, moving hither and yon, the numberless lights along the winding shore, reflected into elongated tapers burning in the water, the fleecy cloud and the silvery sheen of the sifted moonlight, all this and more conspire to make an impression that can never be forgotten.

Soreness of the muscles, whether induced by violent exercise or injury, is quickly relieved by the free application of Chamberlain's Liniment. This liniment is equally valuable for muscular rheumatism, and always affords quick relief. Sold by all dealers.

DOG LICENSES THAT ARE STOLEN

Owners of Pets Who Paid for Their Dog's Privilege of Existing, Had Tags Stolen.

A person that will stoop so low as to steal the license tag off a dog's neck is hardly worth the shot and powder to blow him up, as the saying goes, and this is literally true. Within the last several weeks, or since citizens have been paying taxes on their dogs, a number of cases of the little brass acorn shaped bangle being stolen from the necks of tagged dogs, have been brought to the notice of the police. Of course if the receipt showing that the dog's license has been paid is lost, another must be purchased. If the paper the city clerk has handed out is still in the dog owner's possession a duplicate tag is obtained.

Following is a list of some of the owners and the numbers of their dog tags that have been stolen within the past short while:

- Joe Brown—179 and 180.
- William Balbach—117.
- Nerill Majors—120.
- A. A. Guy—120.
- Jet Collins—153.
- R. L. Kelley—172.
- H. A. Bruce (collar taken also)—708.
- Tom Grogan—444.
- E. P. Walker—458.
- Edna Hunt—225.

Any one seeing any of the above numbers on a dog that it does not belong will confer a favor on the police by notifying them of the fact.

Reject Monotonous Diet. It is not only human beings who object to monotony in diet; flesh-eating animals do the same. Rats soon die if they can get nothing but boiled flesh; after a time they refuse to touch it, and prefer to starve rather than to eat the flesh. Birds differ in this respect from flesh eaters, as they may be fed in captivity for years on the same kind of seeds without taking any hurt.
