CUCKOO STYLE OF PARENTS
 Colonel Roosevelt Has no Sympathy for Them or Woman Suffrage.

[Gate City Leased Wire Service.]
SAN FRANCISCO, March 25.—In his lecture this afternoon before 15,000 people, Colonel Roosevelt asserted that he was not friendly to woman suffrage. In part he said:
 "I am not strongly in favor of woman suffrage. It is infinitely less important than many other questions which affect women. A woman is unworthy of her position unless she thinks and feels more deeply of her duties than her 'rights.' I have absolutely no sympathy for the cuckoo style of parent who, turning his child into a school, thinks he has shifted the responsibility of training the child to instructors as deputy parents."
 "There is too great a tendency to treat with levity the baby question. I see this nation today is beginning to travel the path which France has long been traveling. Census reports show that America is not only importing art and literature—but babies also."
 "Today the immigrants produce more babies than native Americans. I am not over much concerned with the actions of multi-millionaires except that we are foolish enough to allow ourselves to be injured by their example along lines of unproductivity."
 "We must have less divorces, better women, better men, better families and learn to perpetuate the American stock."

REPORTER TELLS HORRIBLE STORY

before I started carrying folks out, I saw a girl on the shirt waist building roof stand there for a moment and then jumped. Her hair was ablaze and streaming behind her as she tumbled through the air."
 District Attorney Whitman left a banquet to go to the scene when he learned of the extent of the holocaust. No sooner had he talked with Chief Croker than he declared he would cause investigation of every building in New York. "I shall first inquire whether the law provides perfect safeguards and whether there is enough law on the subject."
 It was in the Triangle shop that the garment workers strike troubles a year ago originated. After a union organizer had organized nearly all of the Jewish girls then employed there the shop was closed for a fortnight, due to slackness of work, according to owners. When work was resumed the Jewish girls found they had been supplanted by Italians and a breach between the garment workers and employers throughout the district started, which finally resulted in the strike.

QUEEN AND CRESCENT STRIKE ENDED
 Both Sides Make Concessions and Agreement is Reached.

[Gate City Leased Wire Service.]
CINCINNATI, Ohio, March 25.—With the signing of a compromise agreement that involved equal concessions by the striking firemen and the Queen and Crescent Railroad Co., the "color line" strike against negro firemen was settled tonight. A lengthy conference between representatives of strikers and officials of the road at the office of General Manager Harper formulated the agreement.
 The agreement ends the strike at once and the employees now on strike are reinstated without prejudice, thirty days being allowed the company to file charges against those accused of violence.
 No negro firemen are hereafter to be employed on the road; the percentage of negro firemen on the road between Oakdale and Chattanooga is to remain the same as the percentage January 1, 1911, providing sufficient competent white men can be secured.

Roller is Getting Easy.
BUFFALO, N. Y., March 25.—Kid Cutler of Chicago, defeated Dr. B. F. Roller of Seattle tonight in straight falls, the first in 52:03 and the second in 12:21. The wrestling of both men was clean cut and clever throughout the bout.

Billiard Match.
 [Gate City Leased Wire Service.]
ST. LOUIS, Mo., March 25.—Pierre Maupone defeated W. Campbell, representing Philadelphia in the national three cushion billiard tournament here tonight by a score of 50 to 26.

NOT EFFORT TO SAVE LIFE

that the bodies of the unfortunates in the streets be placed in the flimsy brown pine boxes and taken to the city morgue at Twenty-sixth and the East River.
 Recently the small army of police picked up the poor broken forms and placed them in coffins, covering them with sheets that had been requisitioned from Bellevue hospital. They were then loaded into patrol wagons, delivery trucks, grocery wagons and every other means of conveyances and taken to the morgue. It was soon seen that the morgue was too small, so the big dock of the charities department adjoining, was thrown open and the bodies were laid out there in long rows.

Searching the Ruins.
 As soon as the fire was under control, the firemen started to search the building. At the foot of the air shaft or "inside fire escape" they found a number of bodies, while others, a total of thirty, were taken from the other walls.

Never Such a Horror.
 These bodies were terribly charred and mangled. The clothing was burned off many. Veteran firemen like Chief Croker, who have witnessed many terrible sights during their years of service, said they had never encountered any thing more horrifying. Croker, with a squad of firemen and Captain Dominick Henry penetrated to the ninth floor. There they encountered another horror. Piled up against the closed doors of the elevators were charred bodies, most of them almost entirely denuded of clothing. It had been a struggle of the strong against the weak, but victory availed the victors nothing. All had been smothered by the smoke and finally sank on the floors unconscious there to remain until the fire had done its work.

Morris Blank, one of the partners in the firm had his wife, his two children and the latter's governess in the office when the cry of fire was raised. He rushed out of the door and joined his partner, Osac Harris. Together they held back the men and shoved the women into the elevators and down the stairways. It was only when the elevators were useless that they quit and made their own escape. When he reached the street Blank remembered his family and tried to go back, but was driven down the stairs by the fire. Whether they got out safely had not been learned at a late hour tonight.

Harris said that a majority of his employees were Italians. He said the firm had a number of strikers and had replaced the strikers, wherever they could with Italians. He said that he did not know how many were dead and when the police tried to question him he collapsed and was sent to his home in an ambulance.
 When word of the holocaust reached District Attorney Whitman he hurried to the scene with a number of his assistants and started an investigation. He said he was satisfied the loss of life was due to criminal carelessness and he and Fire Marshal Beers questioned scores of persons who could throw light on the tragedy.
 When firemen started to take bodies down to the streets from the upper floors they discovered the stairways were dark. Engines were then brought up along side the shattered structure and their searchlights trained on the upper windows. Each body was wrapped in a blanket and lowered to the ground by ropes, after which it was placed in a coffin and taken to the morgue.

Death List of 250.
 At 9:30 Coroner Holzhauser, who had taken charge of the case, said he didn't believe it would be possible to get the bodies out of the building before Tuesday. He said there were a number in the cellar and sub-cellar which are filled with water. It was his opinion the dead might reach as high as 250 but the police said this estimate was too high.

"This was supposed to be a modern fire proof building," said Holzhauser, "but after inspection I can only characterize it as a worse fire trap than any ramshackle structure on the east side. I have arranged with District Attorney Whitman to be at the inquest on Monday and I will see that those responsible for the conditions that have cost the lives of so many are properly punished."

Remarkable Escape.
 The most remarkable rescue in the history of the New York fire department was made during the fire. A deputy chief while walking through the water in the cellar heard groans coming from the sub-cellar in the neighborhood of the freight elevator. Hurriedly summoning a number of men with lanterns, he lowered himself into the water. There, submerged with only his head above the water, but clinging with a death grip to the cable of the elevator he found Hyman Messel, 21, of 332 East Fifteenth St. The boy was hurriedly carried into the street where an ambulance surgeon forced a stimulant down his throat and brought him back to consciousness.
 Messel said he was on the sixth floor when the fire broke out and finding his escape cut off he slid down the elevator cable landing in the sub-cellar. Too weak to get any further he hung there while the water slowly rose until it reached his neck. His right arm is very badly injured, but the doctors think he will live.

Scenes at the Morgue.
 The old covered dock of the department of charities at the foot of East Twenty-sixth street adjoining the Bellevue hospital was the scene of many soul-rending happenings that have not been paralleled since the victims of the Gen. Slocum were brought there to be identified. Each body was made as presentable as possible and covered with a sheet. By order of the coroner and the police officials efforts to identify the victims were suspended until more than 100 bodies had reached the morgue. The majority of the victims were Italians and long before the first persons were allowed to go inside, the street adjacent was jammed with men, women and children seeking for loved ones who were missing. By 10 o'clock the crowd about the morgue numbered 5,000. Police reserves from a dozen precincts held a line behind which none was permitted to go. Other uniformed officers mingled with the throng and tried to comfort the broken hearted. It was a gruesome task, as the Latin-Americans, excited under ordinary conditions, seemed to have lost all control of themselves.

Mother Finds Her Daughter.
 There were 199 bodies in the morgue at 10 o'clock when Deputy Police Commissioner Driscoll permitted the first squad of searchers to go into the building. From one shroud to the other they passed, but the initial searchers proved unavailing. As the party started towards the door through the low row of white covered bodies, one woman, attracted by a glittering ring on the hand of a badly charred form, stooped and gazed at it. Then, with a cry, "My God, Mary," she straightened up and fell in a dead faint across the cold form. The body was that of Mary Finesta, a shirt worker, who had been in this country only a short time. From that time on, identifications followed slowly. The seven-tenths followed slowly. The seven-tenths followed slowly. The seven-tenths followed slowly.

Clinging to Wealth.
 Practically all the victims had just drawn their wages and when the bodies were taken to the morgue it was found that in several instances the pay envelopes were still clenched in the hands. Considerable sums of money were found on some of the bodies, one woman having $600 in her purse.
 Several of the girls died while sheltered in the arms of older women and in some cases the bodies were still locked together when taken to the morgue.
 Toward midnight the authorities realized that it would be impossible to continue throughout the night and no other searchers will be admitted until morning.
 Of the 141 bodies, thirteen were those of men and the rest women. Thirty-three bodies were burned beyond recognition.

Saved by the Panic.
 Caught up by the torrent of girls when the rush for the elevator began, Ethel Monick was carried bodily into one of the cars, and to this she owes her life. She was just preparing to leave the building, when she saw smoke.
 Vainly trying to restore order among her panic stricken charges, Annie Gullo, the Triangle Company's fore woman happened to glance over the heads of the crowd. In the blazing work room she saw her sister Mary, enveloped in flames from head to foot and standing absolutely rigid, paralyzed with fear. The forewoman tried to break through the surging crowd of girls and reach her sister, but she was thrown back by the rush and carried headlong down the stairs. Mary's body, burned almost beyond recognition, was later found on the spot where her sister had seen her burning.

Back of the Iron Door.
 An iron door, part of the Triangle Company's system to prevent thefts of lace by its employees, is held responsible for at least a score of deaths. At closing time each night a man is stationed at this door to search each employe as they leave. He wasn't there when the mad rush of the trapped and hysterical girls began yesterday afternoon and the throng could not force the barrier, passing which, the girls might have escaped. When the fire was over, charred bodies were found tightly jammed against this door, positive proof of the part it played in the horror.
 A premonition of danger was all that saved Pauline Greenberg from being one of the girls trapped in the burning building. She had secured work with the Triangle Company and was to have begun her labors yesterday, but having an undying feeling of danger, she refused to begin.
Elevator Man's Story.
 Joseph Zito, one of two elevator men on duty in the burned building at the time of the fire was called to the district attorney's office to night. He gave Attorney Whitman the following statement of his experience:
 "I had just brought several employes down stairs and was waiting for a ring when I heard a crashing of glass, apparently on the eighth floor. A shower of glass came down the shaft and landed on top of my car. "I started the car up at once. At

Looking For Dorothy.
 [Gate City Leased Wire Service.]
PITTSBURG, March 25.—It was learned today that George S. Griscom, Jr., known to fame as the suitor of the missing Dorothy Arnold, arrived in Pittsburgh yesterday afternoon and is stopping at the home of his uncle, Gilbert M. Black. The elder Griscom and Miss Griscom are both at the Hotel Kenmar. Efforts to interview young Griscom have proven unavailing. The Black's admitted that he is in the house but beyond this they would say nothing.
