THE EDISON DISC PHONOGRAPH

THE MARVEL OF THE CENTURY

Crowning Achievement of Mr. Edison's Career—A Musical Instrument, Not a "Talking Machine"

EDISON'S MASTERPIECE

The Edison DiscPhonograph marks the attainment of an ideal by a man whose ideals are many years in advance of the age in which he lives. Thomas A. Edison has finally reached the successful culmination of thirty-five years of endeavor to perfectly reproduce sound. You know that Mr. Edison invented the first phonograph. This was in 1877, and the final perfection of that particular invention is found in the new Edison Cylinder Phonograph which you very possibly have not yet heard. One year later, in 1878, Mr. Edison invented and patented the first disc phonograph. This information may come to many as a surprise, for not until now, the end of the year 1913, has the great master permitted a disc phonograph to be offered in his name. Grimly scornful of others' bombastic claims and calmly indifferent to opportunities of commercial exploitation, Edison, with characteristic patience and tenacity of purpose, continued to seek the solution of those baffling problems of acoustics, which until now have stood in the way of a perfect record and a perfect reproduction of music.

Has Two Wives. GENEVA, Oct. 11.—Owing to an error of judgment on the part of doctors in a lunatic asylum here, a wealthy manufacturer, finds himself the husband of two wives and the father of two families, each consisting of two children. The legal authorities instead of prosecuting him for bigamy are trying to get him out of the difficulty. The man's first wife became insane many years ago, and, after attempting to set fire to her house, she was confined to an asylum. She was declared to be incurably insane. After waiting several years the husband obtained a divorce on the medical certificate. He married again. Recently the doctors at the asylum have found that after the treatment, extending over six years, the first wife had recovered. They declared her sane and discharged her. The ground of divorce being "incurable insanity," and the woman being not legally sane it is held that the divorce does not hold good. The second wife, who lives in Paris, refuses to meet the first. The husband is on the best of terms with both.
