—Advertisers nowadays plan to build business—not merely to make immediate sales. They know that a carelessly made statement would come back to plague them, so they weigh their words carefully. There is no news that goes into the newspaper that is more carefully edited or held to more ironical statements of fact than the advertising of reputable merchants. As a big merchant expresses the general sentiment, "Money spent to advertise a lie is worse than money thrown away. It is money spent for a sword by which you must commit business suicide."
