—Quincy Journal: The digger-dredge of the Quincy Sand company burned in the middle of the Mississippi river at a point slightly nearer the Missouri shore opposite the Diamond Jo warehouse yesterday morning between 11 and 12 o'clock. The machine was valued at approximately $1,000. It was totally destroyed, the hull finally sinking with a hissing sound that could be heard across the water at a distance of over half a mile. Two employees of the Quincy Sand company who happened to be along the shore, saw the blaze shortly after it broke out. They secured a skiff and rowed out to the scene, taking buckets in their boat. By that time the blaze was so fierce, being fanned by a brisk wind, that they could do comparatively nothing. They waited until the upper structure had burned away and then tried to save the hull by stacking the blaze in the coal bunkers. They were unable to do anything here, however, and the weight of the engine and boiler soon forced the leaking hull to the bottom.
—The last Iowa weather and crop bulletin for the season has just been issued for the week ending September 13, as follows: Cool, cloudy and wet weather prevailed during the week. The average temperature was about 5 degrees below the normal, and the rainfall was copious to excessive. Pastures have revived and are now in good condition, and fall plowing and seeding of winter wheat and rye is progressing rapidly. Late potatoes and some late corn will be benefited by the rains, but the bulk of the corn is dry and beyond danger of injury by frost. Based on present conditions and an area of 9,324,000 acres, the state will produce about 320,000,000 bushels of corn. A summary of reports received September 1, with 80 per cent of the threshing completed, shows the average yield of small grains to be as follows: Oats, 33 bushels per acre; winter wheat, 22; spring wheat, 11,000,000 of barley and timothy seed, 4.2 bushels per acre. If these estimates are maintained by final returns, the state will produce about 165,000,000 bushels of oats, 11,000,000 of winter wheat, 4,000,000 of spring wheat, 11,000,000 of barley and 1,300,000 bushels of rye.
