

Autumn in the Garden.
Pale gossamers of marshland birth Are tangled through the shortened days;
New flavors from the spice-fed earth
Blow lightly down the garden ways.
Among the rose vines' russet leaves,
Across the pinks' deserted bed,
A thrifty housewife spider weaves
A tapestry of silver thread.

Through dreamy lights of afternoon,
Against the shadows' lilac folds,
In pomp of saffron and maroon Parade the saucy marigolds,
A cricket from his dusk retreat (A ragged plainlain awning) sings;
About the empty garden seat,
Like cameo the bead moss clings.

As rainy-scented mornings come
And chillier grows each narrow day, Afoot, awing, with whir and hum,
The summer insects flit away;
And, like an echo of the tides
That murmur in an ocean shell,
A zephyr in the woodbine hides
And bids the emigrants farewell."
—Harriet W. Symonds.

Board-Northrup Nuptials.
On Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. R.
Board, occurred the marriage of their daughter, Elizabeth Mary, to Mr. Albert Allen Northrup of New York. The double ring service was read by Dr. Ezra B. Newcomb of the First Westminster Presbyterian church. An improvised altar was arranged in the living room, before a lattice of asparagus fern, interwoven with white roses. The wedding march from Lohengrin, was played by Miss Irene Rolloson with a violin obligato by Mr. Agne. The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended only by Miss Margaret Dorsey, who held her bouquet during the service. Mr. John Sprowls was best man. The bride's gown was of white charmeuse with duchesse lace trimming. She wore a tulle bridal veil and carried a bouquet of bride's roses. Following the ceremony, a
