A PERFECT NIGHT.
It would have been a perfect night—
The moon was like a silver disc,
A circle so celestial bright.
Pinned to the curtain of the sky,
The pine, the pungent tamarisk
Of later lands, gave new delight
To every zephyr passing by.
The rose was pallid in the moon;
The rose became a saintly thing;
The ruddy passion of the noon
Was melted to a tender hue,
The luster of a fairy's wing;

I heard the sighing branches croon;
And yet a note was missing—
You.

It would have been a perfect night—
So sweet a night we never know
I heard the whirl of angel-flight
And murmured music everywhere;
The blue above, the green below—
It would have been a perfect night
Had you been there.
—Douglas Malloch in American Lumberman.

Of Interest to Women
By Winona Evans Reeves.

A series of articles relating to women, in the nature of as others see us, have been running in the Outlook lately. One of them, entitled "The Faults of Women Shoppers," in substance the article said, that women have a good deal to say of clerks who may on rare occasions be impatient or discourteous, and yet forget their own failures. One of the types which clerks dread to see is the woman who comes in five minutes before closing time with a long list of things she wishes to buy; another is the woman who really wants to buy goods of a certain color, but looks at all the stock in every shade; still another keeps a running comment on the small choice and poor selection of goods kept in the store. To find anything but kindness and consideration from Keokuk clerks is very rare. Many women of this city have mentioned within the last few weeks, particularly since she has been so very ill, the kindness and patience and understanding of Miss Ada Rollins who for many years has clerked in various stores of the city. Many women have entrusted their shopping of staples to her, by merely sending her a list, knowing that her judgment was to be relied upon. She was almost uncanny in her understanding of the wishes of her regular customers. Apropos of women shoppers and Keokuk stores, recently a society woman, one of the most attractively dressed women in town, said she never buys anything outside of Keokuk stores—at that moment she was wearing a beautiful evening dress, scalloped around the bottom with beautiful lace ruffles beneath the scallops and a beaded lace bodice and every thread of it had been bought in Keokuk. Of course the temptation to those who are able to go to a city is the charm of the big shops and stores and the possibilities of duplicates are less. This story has been told here many times: One Sunday morning a woman walked down the main aisle of one of the churches, wearing a very modish coat. She was seated and in a moment a second woman walked in, wearing a coat exactly like it, and the congregation began to think they were seeing things when the third woman walked in, wearing exactly the same style of coat. But duplicates happen in goods bought out of the city too. Not very long ago, at a reception there were two gowns exactly alike, one had been bought in Chicago and the other in New York. Several years ago a Keokuk woman bought a handsome hat in Chicago with the assurance that it was an exclusive model. She came home to find a woman in the next block with a hat identically like it, an "exclusive model" also bought in the same hat shop.

Did you know that the century dictionary suggests that the well known stamp of approval O. K. was Chief Keokuk's signature? It says: "The term may have had its origin from a noted Indian chief, old Keokuk who is said to have signed the treaties made by his tribe with the government with the initials O. K."

We are indebted to Mrs. Clara R. Little of Port Wayne, whose Keokuk friends are legion, for an article written by Mrs. Charles L. Nelcamp, a prominent D. A. R. giving the connection the women of this country have had with the flag. The article is in part to answer the charge made that the women in advocating the peace propaganda demonstrate that American women lack patriotism. She cites the fact that the first flag was made by a woman, Betsy Ross, in June, 1776. That in every state at the outbreak of the civil war, the first flags carried to the front were made by women, home made, out of any material they could secure. The girls of Portsmouth made a flag out of their best gowns and presented it to Paul Jones to hoist over the Ransker, July 4, 1777. This flag was the first American flag the Europeans ever saw and the first to be saluted by European naval power.

Mrs. Kady Brownell, wife of an orderly sergeant of the First and afterward of the Fifth Rhode Island Infantry, was chosen color bearer of her husband's regiment. She marched with the men, carrying the flag and participating in battle as bravely as any of her comrades.

She was in the first battle of Bull Run and stood by her colors and maintained her position until her regiment had retreated. She was also in the expedition of General Burnside to Roanoke Island and Newbern.

The largest flag ever made by hand was put together by Miss Josephine Mulford of Madison, N. J. She was moved partly by sentiment and partly by a desire to pay off the mortgage on her mother's little home in a novel and patriotic way.

Many who read the article A New Way to Train Children, in the current issue of the Ladies' Home Journal, may not have known that Mr. C. A. Donnelly, who originated the "New Way," is married to a Keokuk girl! The article is descriptive of the plan which Mr. Donnelly, superintendent of the Colorado state home for dependent children, originated to govern and train the children. The plan is most interesting and has worked out successfully, but Keokuk is interested in it because Mr. Donnelly is Caroline Brinkman's husband.

The splendid way in which not only Indiana but other states celebrated the birthday anniversary of James Whitcomb Riley a few days ago, goes to show that the world is getting away from that idea, as incidentally expressed by the minstrel man who said: "Bonquets for the dead and brick-bats for the living." The celebration surely filled the poet's soul with joy and it did a world of good to the children who had a large part in the celebration.

Vinton Heald: Time was when the word "standpat" could be found in the political lexicon. That was when a famous statesman "shouted" "standpat." Another famous statesman went to Minneapolis, and in a public speech said: "The competition is better entitled to competition than the producer is to protection."

The party then divided into two elements—standpat and progressive—and proceeded to fight it out. They left an unfinished battle for, in the meantime, the democrats came into power, and now we have neither a revenue tariff nor a protective tariff.

One of these noted statesmen is dead; the other has declared for a

The great conflict in this country will always be the difference in wages between the artisans of this and the old country.

There is no question but the great majority of the people of this country desire a protective tariff. Its weak point is its schedules, and these have always furnished food for the free trade advocate.

On the tariff the Eagle is a stand-patter. It believes in competitive articles the American manufacturer and artisan should have the advantage. To a degree that will protect. On all other public questions its editorial columns are the best evidence as to whether it "pushes" or "bucks."

The mission of all republican papers for the next three years should be the reinstatement of the protective tariff laws.
