Joe Carwalho sends The Gate City a copy of the News-Bee which is filled with advertising. It is a two-four page edition. Evidently the Toledo merchants are impressed with the value of advertising as page after page of the edition is almost solid with the announcements of the business men. Relatives of C. A. Young, the Memphis man who died at St. Joseph's hospital Sunday afternoon, were in Keokuk this afternoon and arranged to have the body taken to Memphis this evening, from the undertaking establishment of Crimmins & Chase. Mr. Young was born in Ohio in 1875 and had been a resident of Memphis and vicinity for twenty years. Two sisters and a brother survive. They are: Mrs. Anna May Greene, Memphis; Mrs. B. F. Paine, Carthage, and George Young of Galesburg, Ill. There will be a former Keokuk resident on the Henry Ford peace ship. A change of venue from the court of Justice James Burrows to that of Justice John Leindecker, was taken by the defendant today in the case of Virgie Osborn vs. Emma Bird, in which slander is alleged. Plaintiff is asking for $99 judgment. The petition does not set out the alleged slanders made, but the allegation of slander is made. LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS President American Society for Thrift

Thrift means the careful saving and prudent spending of money we have honestly earned. It does not mean trying to 'get rich quick' by foolhardy speculation without knowledge or experience. For some time we have seen a veritable fever of stock speculation sweeping over the country. Advanced prices in 'war stocks' was the cause of this period of abnormal speculation. This is the logical result of a great war which always sees wild speculation. Governments spend immense amounts of money which means that some interests make big profits and speculators rush to share the profits. While a few may increase their store in the midst of these wild market conditions, thousands of poor 'lambs' are fleeced. A New York bank cashier saw a short road to wealth when war stocks were sent sky high. He thought he'd 'make a million overnight.' He had disappeared and the bank he worked for is short $100,000. Other cases just as mad might be cited. The American people should keep their equilibrium in this matter as they do in others. Even the winners in such reckless speculation testify to the truth of the saying 'Easy come, easy

SEND DELEGATION TO TRAIL MEETING

Keokuk Would Like to Have Big Delegation at National Trail Gathering at Kirksville.

NEIGHBORS ARE ACTIVE

Kahoka and Other Towns Close at Hand Are Enthusiastic Over Meeting and Want Keokuk Men to Go.

Keokuk has been urged to send a delegation of automobile men to the meeting at Kirksville, Mo., on Wednesday. At this meeting a discussion of the marking of the national trail will be taken up. Keokuk will be represented at the meeting, it is practically certain, and if there are any automobile men here who wish to attend the meeting they can learn of the nature of the gathering by communicating with the Industrial association. Word comes to the association from Kahoka and other towns in this vicinity that there is considerable enthusiasm about this trail proposition in their towns, and they want Keokuk to send a delegation and help get the trail through this district. It is quite generally felt that as many trails as can be brought through any stated district, just so much the better for the towns on the trail. The neighboring motorists have notified association officers that they will attend and as many from here as can possibly make the trip are urged to go by association officers. The meeting will open at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning in one of the Kirksville theatres.

Society Feels War.

A Chicago girl recently went to New York to enjoy her first social season there and wrote back that the horrors of war had struck New York society as evidenced in the menus served at fashionable functions. The following she gave as an average luncheon menu:

- Egg souffle Lamb chops with peas Boiled potatoes Bread pudding.

A Chicago woman commenting on the simplicity of fare, said: "Every thing here is much simpler than in former years, but I have yet to find boiled potatoes and bread pudding at a luncheon. New York is of course, always more advanced than Chicago, and so her simplicity of entertainment is more extreme."

HALF MILLION WOMEN TEACHERS

In Service of Elementary Schools—Thousands of Others in Colleges and High Schools.

NATION'S NECESSITIES

They Are Doing the Work That Men Used to do—Have to Handle All Sorts of Problems.

More than half a million women are enrolled this month in the service of the elementary public schools of the United States. Thousands of others are connected with high schools, private schools, colleges and universities, in addition to the increasingly large number who are acting as state, county or city superintendents or supervisors of some particular branch of study. With school work no longer restricted to the lower grades; she has taken her place in the highest executive and university circles. She is doing efficiently much of the work that was done by men a few years ago. Each year increases her numbers, and despite her low average earnings the two highest public school salaries paid in the United States go to women.

Women in most states have few civic rights, but they are everywhere invested with the sacred responsibility of training men through their civic duties. More than 60 percent of the school children of this country receive all their education from women. In New York 92 percent of the boys never come in contact with a man teacher. Frequently whatever principles are inculcated, have been given them by the woman teachers of the lower grades.

The percentage of children in a closely populated city who advance to high school, or even complete the grammar grade, is relatively small. In Philadelphia, for example, it is for girls. One reason for the increasing preponderance of woman teachers is the larger number of girls who remain in school long enough to receive the qualifying education. It is typical of American chivalry that women are made to educate all of their children he keeps his girls in a school. The boys go to work. An opposite course is likely to be pursued in Europe.

The New York high school graduates five girls for every three boys. In Chicago two girls graduate for each boy. In Philadelphia the proportion is even greater because of the great commercial high school, exclusively for girls, which turns out yearly 400 graduates.

The Philadelphia board of education established a school of 2000 girls as a rival to the boys' school. It would attract more young men to the teachers' profession. Notwithstanding the fact that the young pedagogues start with a considerably higher salary than the girls from the normal schools, it is still increasing in the Quaker city and still increasing and a few of them are receiving salaries closely approaching those paid to men.

The charm of infinite variety attaches itself to the school ma'am to a greater degree than any other class of women. As a whole, she is attractive, wholesome and well bred. The antiquated female of the old fashioned school, with her bunch of switches and general ignorance, has nothing in common with the woman teacher of today, who has been trained scientifically in her work. She has finished a course of study that is broad and far reaching. It covers ethics and economics as well as the regular grade studies.

English, French and Italian Companies to Combine in Order to Work Against German Producers.

AMERICAN FILMS BEST

No Such Pictures as Those Made in the United States, Have Been Turned Out in England.

[United Press Correspondence.] LONDON, Nov. 29.—(By mail).—British moving picture producers have formed a "triple entente" with the producers of France and Italy to prevent American competition and that of a new German "triple alliance" driving them out of business. British movies have been one of the English industries hardest hit by the war. When hostilities began over a year ago there were in the British Isles forty houses producing moving picture films. Up to date twenty-three of these have been obliged to close. Others have been expected to follow.

That the German houses have been equally hard hit is not doubted, but Germany has steadily taken steps to prevent finding herself at the close of the war too far behind the rest of the world. A "triple alliance" has been formed between the German Oilyer and the German Union companies with the Nordisk house of Denmark. The new alliance is officially known as the Nordische-Oiliver-Union.

Unless the few remaining British producers can form an "entente" that will tide them over until prosperity comes after the end of the war, Germany will have a lead they can never lose. The British alliance with American producers already miles ahead, the Britishers admit that the prospects are fairly desperate.

The movement just started embraces a moving picture alliance with the producers of the "allied powers" in Europe. Belgium, France and Italy not count much from a movie standpoint, but France and Italy are two of the big movie producing nations. With two such allies, British houses hope to keep from dropping behind Germany.

The plan is to organize handling houses such as the already established in the United States. They would handle only "allied films" and in this way the British producers would find a market. Falling in this, they may be doomed to produce merely for American houses, which are being allowed to place their names on the films. American films have invaded London to such an extent that there is not a heavy market for English productions. Americans have the knack, they say, of being able to get motion picture stars to appear in their films. They also actors and also in being able to spend unlimited amounts of cash in securing the proper sort of production equipment.

Introducing the Rainbow Uniform.

[United Press Correspondence.] LONDON, Oct. 18. (By mail).—Khaki, field grey and German green as invisible colors for armies are dismal failures. Fourteen months of war in the field has proved that the most invisible army of all would be one whose soldiers were clad in models of Joseph's coat. Such at least is the verdict of a high British officer, who in months at the front has made a study of the visibility of colors.

In clothing an army, the highest point of invisibility is reached, and is obtained by garbing each man in a different color: one in green, the next in blue, another in grey, one in red and so on alternately, according to the color expert's scheme. If this proved impracticable, each man should be dressed in a combination of soft toned colors. Either scheme, says the officer, would enable an entire army corps to merge inconspicuously into any background.

Like the Scottish kilts, the olive-drab khaki of the British army today is based on custom, not science, he declared. Khaki originated in the British Indian army and later got to England. The European war has shown that it is far more satisfactory on the Indian plains or the African veldt than lined against the landscape of France or Belgium.

Observers unanimously have reported that against the snows of winter or the green foliage of spring or summer, the khaki clad Tommy is a conspicuous target. The same is declared to be true of the greyish green of the German uniforms.

The non-union men jumped off their car and backed to the sidewalk, using their switch irons and control cranks to fight their way through. Another car came along and met the same fate, but the two crews escaped serious injury when they found safety in a doctor's office.

Various explanations for the break were volunteered in exchange market circles; they were mostly of a commercial nature, affecting some change in the balance of merchandise trade direct or indirect between Germany and this country. But the movement must also have some larger economic significance. Of the day's stock market, nothing need be said except that it continued the desultory movement of prices which has continued since the readjustment of prices in the war industries was completed. The market was not inactive, but its tendency was to vary slightly from the level at which it started.
