What the War Moves Mean

By J. W. T. Mason, Former European Manager of the United Press.

[United Press Leased Wire Service.] NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg's anxiously awaited peace speech in the reichstag today has turned out to be an extremely clever maneuver to throw upon the allies the delicate task of being the first to state what they are fighting for. The German chancellor is thus trying to get the better position for his country in the eyes of neutrals by suggesting that responsibility for continuing the war rests on the quadruple entente.

The allies are accused of being actuated still by the desire to crush Germany, which they publicly proclaimed at the outbreak of the war. The chancellor thus intimates that the Germans are in reality fighting a defensive war and it is therefore all the more necessary that Germany's enemies shall be the first to break silence concerning an acceptable basis for a compromise.

The speech is that of a bargainer, but a bargainer who doesn't know how much he can get and who wants the other side to come forth with suggestions first. Nevertheless there is evidence in the speech that the chancellor feels the peace negotiations, when they begin must center about the future status of Belgium, Alsace-Lorraine, Serbia and Poland. This in all probability is the reason for the large attention paid in the address to the question of rights of small nationalities. The chancellor seems bent on trying to suggest that since nobody respects small nationalities, the peace conference cannot be limited in its method of regulating their future.

By referring to the British administration of India and Egypt and to the attitude of the allies toward Greece, the chancellor challenges Great Britain to prove how she can consider herself the champion of small nations. The emphasis laid upon German population of Alsace implies a belief that a critical part of the peace discussion must relate to the future ownership of France's lost provinces. The speech throughout is not only an able defensive document, but its defense has been combined cleverly with an offensive threat of Germany's power to continue the war as long as her enemies. The speech does not in itself bring peace any nearer. It will do so, however, if it fulfills its purpose of inciting the allies to declare what they are fighting for.

Late Market Quotations

Long Commission Co. Grain Letter. [Furnished by Long Commission Co., 402 1/2 Main, Telephone No. 100.]

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—Wheat—The range in wheat was narrow, a small net decline resulting. Local sentiment was bearish, but around inside prices. Commission houses bought liberally and rallies on short covering were frequent. Bearish reports from Liverpool was a factor that was considered here in view of the fact that they increased supplies and are omitting no opportunity to issue depressing news. The setback from the high points has not been as great as was anticipated but has brought out lots of buying orders on the several breaks.

Corn—Corn was easier throughout the day and lost 1/4 cent. Local traders appear bearish. They have been anticipating a sharp break. While some receiving houses were reported, indications of an increased movement. There was no pressure of corn either in the spot or to arrive market.

Oats—Oats were heavy with other signs of some liquidation. Some export business was done but details have not been given out. The heaviest sellers of May corn were also sellers of oats, and the investment buying was of very small volume. Seaboard clearance was 770,000 bushels. There is some talk that Canadian oats are being offered at seaboard cheaper, but these large clearances don't look like it.

Provisions—Commission houses bought provisions and packers sold. An advance in hog prices encouraged outside selling. Packers find it profitable to sell their products under present conditions and are therefore marketing the products, making it difficult for much of a rally. Demands for meat only fair and inquiries for lard low.

PROMPT ACTION BY UNCLE SAM

countenanced such violations, cited the following:
"An American tug left San Francisco early in the war to aid the Japanese cruiser Asama, stranded at Turtle Bay.
Japanese cruisers smuggled Japanese recruits aboard after rounding them up in Fresno and Los Angeles.
Collector of Customs Davis allowed the converted British warship Llan-gorse to overstay its twenty-four hours leave in San Francisco harbor. Washington decided that because Sunday intervened, the overstay was not a violation of neutrality.
Parts of submarines manufactured in the Union Iron Works here were smuggled into Canada for assembling.
United States and Canadian officials in collusion permitted Japanese to reach Canada to reinforce crews of Japanese warships.
Bopp also charged that United States District Attorney Preston of San Francisco was pro-British and did not prosecute thoroughly the attempts by British agents to gain recruits here.
"I don't like this country any more," said Consul Bopp. He refrained from commenting on President Wilson's message attacking hyper-national Americans, but hinted that the president's remarks evidently were aimed chiefly at German-Americans.
Counsellor Lempeke of the consulate approved Bopp's statements.

ARE READY TO DISCUSS PEACE

without risking being considered weak hearted or dispirited."
Scheidemann protested against those who dream of a war of annexation.
"But equally foolish is it for our enemies to advocate the dismemberment of Germany or to crusade against the so-called Prussian militarism," he said, "first because this expression is wrong and second because this affair concerns nobody but the Germans themselves."
Scheidemann said it was folly for the French to continue to desire to annex Alsace-Lorraine. But in pushing his demand for a statement of peace terms he asserted that notwithstanding her great victories, Germany had also made great sacrifices.
"The question of peace is now up for peremptory in all the countries at war," he said. "Only the statesmen do not know how to begin negotiations, because they consider such step would be a confession of weakness."
He mentioned the peace address of Lord Courtney in the British parliament and the agitation of Italian socialists. He quoted Count Andrássy as authority for the statement that according to reliable private information, the longing for peace is general in France.
"My plea for a statement of peace terms, like that of Lord Courtney, need by no means be construed as a sign of lack of strength," said the socialist leader. "But the present war is bringing Europe to the verge of ruin."
Scheidemann, however, assailed the idea that it is possible to starve Germany. Recent census figures, he said, showed 20,000,000 swine and 55,000,000 kilograms of potatoes in Germany, enough food, he said, to supply the entire empire for a long time.
Scheidemann quoted Kaiser Wilhelm as saying that this is no war for conquest.
"Therefore," said the socialist leader, "I have asked the chancellor to state possible conditions of peace."
In concluding, Scheidemann denied that Germany is seeking world leadership. He asserted that she wants only to be the equal of other nations. The present moment is opportune for peace talk, he said. By moving now, Germany he declared, may gain the glory she first dreamed of.
