THREE MEN

Leslie's Weekly: It has been said that if Charles E. Hughes, once governor of the state of New York, and now associate justice of the supreme court of the United States, would permit the use of his name in connection with the republican nomination for the presidency, he would have little opposition for that honor. Admittedly one of the strongest men mentioned—and mentioned most frequently in all sections of the country—he nevertheless would encounter the opposition of those leaders who feel that his unyielding disposition might disrupt the party organization. Justice Hughes may well be described as a militant statesman. It was he who started the reform of big business by his energetic inquiry into the large insurance companies of New York, as counsel for the commission which made the investigation. He believes in republican principles. He is a protectionist. He differed with the leaders of his party in New York, holding that the governor was the real leader of the people when he occupied that office. His insistence upon legislation eliminating gambling from race tracks won him some enemies in New York, but whenever a fight of this kind confronted him he carried his argument direct to the people. It was Charles E. Hughes who really discovered the latent power of the people; who found that the people were mightier by far than any bosses possibly could be. He is rather unbending and cold. He is not the kind of a man to whom a politician could talk "practical politics" with ease. His idea of practical politics is to "tell your troubles to the public." Since his elevation to the supreme court he has seemed more aloof, and he has made it plain that he does not care to have his name used in connection with the presidency. History fails to record a single case where any man actually tendered the nomination ever refused it, and it is wholly possible that a dead-end republican convention may turn to him as the standard bearer.

Roosevelt! It is not surprising on the eve of the republican national convention that the attitude of Mr. Roosevelt toward that party is being freely discussed. What Mr. Roosevelt intends to do will be announced in his own good time and in his own way, as had been his custom. The fact that Judge Gary of the Steel corporation, had Colonel Roosevelt at a private dinner and that the guests included a number of captains of industry and finance, one of two of them democrats, signifies no more than the customary hospitality of the eminent citizen who is at the head of our greatest industrial corporation. The statement from an editorial friend of the ex-president that Colonel Roosevelt stands ready to support Justice Hughes of New York, Senator Knox of Pennsylvania, or Governor Hadley of Missouri, if any of these should be nominated at Chicago, corroborates the report previously circulated that the colonel would refuse to endorse any candidate who played a conspicuous part in the Taft convention of 1912. The statement that Mr. Roosevelt will accept only a ticket on which he shall have the privilege of naming the candidate for second place is afloat, but this does not sound like the colonel. He is a first place man. One conclusion seems to be established and that is that the republican party will go into the next campaign more nearly unified than seemed possible a short time ago. So far as the progressive party is concerned, its membership, according to the returns of the last election, has been so completely dissipated that it is now reduced to a corporal's guard. The colonel is not a corporal.

Although past the age of three score years and ten, Ellhu Root today is at the very zenith of his career, and is in full mental and physical vigor. He is one of the greatest lawyers and statesmen ever produced in America. Theodore Roosevelt, when president, described him as the "ablest man in public life." He has been secretary of war and secretary of state. The army came nearer to being a modern war machine under his administration in the war department than it has been at any time since. His handling of foreign affairs when head of the state department won the admiration of the world. He is one of the leading advocates of peace; yet, if he were president of the United States, the international rights of the nation would be guarded with a firm hand. As senator from New York, his addresses illuminated most of the public questions of the day. While he has been the attorney for many large corporations, earning more than $100,000 a year from his practice, he has never hesitated to sacrifice his income in order to serve the government—against the corporations when justice dictated such a course. No man has ever questioned his unyielding loyalty to his country. Mr. Root is soft spoken, cultured and kindly. He has a sense of humor that frequently takes the form of satire. In the senate, he was regarded as the nation's foremost statesman.

When I was 5 years old my father taught me the value of walking by allowing me to catch his forefinger and trudge over the fields and down the lanes of the middle west farm where I was born. My father walked over the place each day for the purpose of inspecting the work of the laborers, and being the sort of a man, he frequently forgot me. When I became tired and warm, I dropped his finger and paused under a large tree or slipped into a huge round ditch-tile where I took a nap, after which I walked back home. When he returned to the house, I was always there safe and sound and he frequently forgot that I had started on the journey with him. Occasionally he remembered and looked at me queerly, shaking his head at me and telling me to always come back home. Shall I please you to take one of the first walks with me when I was a child my father's farm in the middle west? How beautiful it was in the spring time! Today I can see the blossoming orchards like great bouquets dropped down in the midst of green fields—the cherry and peach trees, lovely as the delicate pink of the first faint flush of dawn; the apple trees with their emerald setting for the wax-like blossoms of exquisite, tender rose and white, and the fluttering snow-flake petals of the pear trees; I can feel the softness of the sandy lanes, flower-bordered, and sense again the fragrance wafted across the spaces from nature's blossoming May time.

DISMISSES CASE AGAINST REILLY

Justice Whetstone, on Motion Filed by Defendant's Attorney, Sustains Move to Dismiss Action.

HE WAS NON-RESIDENT

Reilly's Attorney Claimed That the Court Had No Jurisdiction in Regard to His Client.

The case of D. E. Reeves vs. Fox Reilly was dismissed yesterday in the court of J. A. Whetstone, justice of the peace. Mr. Reilly having been proved a non-resident. The case was called at 2 o'clock after jury had been summoned and witnesses subpoenaed. C. H. Dickey, who represented the defendant, moved orally to dismiss plaintiff's action for non-residence before he had any standing in the court to proceed. This was over-ruled. The defendant then filed a motion to dismiss because Fox Reilly was not a resident of this Lee county, this giving the court no jurisdiction. Section 4476 of the code gives jurisdiction only against actual residents, and section 4480 against non-residents only when aided by attachment. No attachment had been issued and defendant Reilly having been shown to be a non-resident of the county, the motion was sustained. The case was dismissed at plaintiff's cost, the plaintiff excepting to the decision.

Knows Nothing About It.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The Austrian government has notified the state department, it is understood, that after a full investigation, it has been unable to determine how the British steamer Persia was sunk. Austrian Charge Zwiendek is said to have placed this information before Lansing at a conference they held today. Austria has secured reports from all of her submarines, none of them were operating near where the Persia went down. The government, it was said, had no information to show whether the Persia was sunk by a submarine, mine or an interior explosion. This leaves the United States with no means of placing responsibility for the disaster.

COME TAKE A WALK WITH ME

[By Grace Wilcox in Los Angeles Express.]

Come take a walk with me! You never can tell, perhaps you will learn, as I have, that it is more fun to walk than to motor! Walking is about the most inexpensive hobby one may support. Although slow, it is a sure mode of conveyance. The dangers from collisions, turning over 300-foot embankments, smashing into the front of the windshield, running into a Ford or running over foot-passengers and missing the scenery along the way—all these dangers are lessened—materially lessened—when one transports oneself via shank's mares. The nerves, too, are soothed and the soul is tranquil, and while the body may become weary, the mind goes clearly. If you, my friends, will walk with me I will introduce you to many pleasant persons along the highway of life, and show you scenes in many places—scenes in other states and cities, scenes in Los Angeles and close "at home." Walking is my only talent, and while not claiming to be a child prodigy, yet I started at a very early age to walk. When I was 5 years old my father taught me the value of walking by allowing me to catch his forefinger and trudge over the fields and down the lanes of the middle west farm where I was born. My father walked over the place each day for the purpose of inspecting the work of the laborers, and being the sort of a man, he frequently forgot me. When I became tired and warm, I dropped his finger and paused under a large tree or slipped into a huge round ditch-tile where I took a nap, after which I walked back home. When he returned to the house, I was always there safe and sound and he frequently forgot that I had started on the journey with him. Occasionally he remembered and looked at me queerly, shaking his head at me and telling me to always come back home. Shall I please you to take one of the first walks with me when I was a child my father's farm in the middle west? How beautiful it was in the spring time! Today I can see the blossoming orchards like great bouquets dropped down in the midst of green fields—the cherry and peach trees, lovely as the delicate pink of the first faint flush of dawn; the apple trees with their emerald setting for the wax-like blossoms of exquisite, tender rose and white, and the fluttering snow-flake petals of the pear trees; I can feel the softness of the sandy lanes, flower-bordered, and sense again the fragrance wafted across the spaces from nature's blossoming May time.

starred the soft grass in the woods at the rear of the farm—woods shining and bright with the fresh green of the maples, oaks, beeches and elms, and, penetrating as the fute above the other, orchestral perfumes of the spring time, the spicy aroma of the trailing arbutus hidden beneath the stump of an old oak filled the senses with the sweetness distilled from all the freshness and vigor of the earth. Over the sun-kissed landscape hung the strange and balmy stillness of that season so recently from the shackles of winter, and occasionally a robin poured out his soul in thankfulness to God. Mingled with the aromatic incense of the trees bursting with leaf and bud and blossom, there arose too the fresh earth-smell of new-turned furrows, as the plowman broke the alliance now and then with their adjurations to the heavy horses slowly and rhythmically plodding through the rich brown soil. In the meadows where the trees cast long shadows on the ground, cows kicked their heels in defiance of fate and their mothers, and the pigs grunted their approval of the world, while over them a meadowlark trilled his glad song heavenward. As the finger of twilight pointed earthward, again I hear the faint tinkle of the supper bell and walking toward the gray house on the hillside, who shall say that heaven was more than a little step away?

AMUSEMENTS.

Carlisle Blackwell Tonight. Supported by Edna Mayo and an excellent cast of film players, the Grand's offering tonight is "The Key to Yesterday." The story is as follows: George Carter, a revolutionist in South America, is the exact double of Frederick Marston, a famous artist in Paris. Carter is betrayed by a comrade and is sentenced to be shot. He takes a desperate chance and escapes on board a vessel bound for London. In Paris Marston is stabbed by a model because he does not return her love. The wound incapacitates him from painting, and leaves an ugly scar, and he goes to America on a vacation. Highwaymen attack him, inflicting injuries which cause a total loss of memory. The robbers leave nothing in his pockets but the key to his Paris studio, and Marston adopts the name of Robert Anglo-Saxon. Five years later he has the ship lock with Duska Filson, a noted beauty, and at a dinner give by her he meets General Robero, a South American ambassador, the man who condemned Carter to death. Robero believes Saxon is Carter and writes Saxon a letter warning him that if he marries Duska he will have Saxon extradited to South America and shot. Robero convinces him that it is Carter and Saxon goes to South America to pay the penalty of the crimes he believes himself guilty of. On the boat he meets Rodman, Carter's betrayer. Duska follows Saxon to South America and learns that Saxon has proven his innocence and departed two days before. She sends him a wireless and he has the ship lock and lands at Puerto Rico, and learns that the revolution has broken out. In fighting his way through the lines he is shot and is placed on board a vessel bound for France by Rodman. Rodman tells Duska what has occurred and she follows Saxon to France. Saxon's mind clears and through the medium of the key which fits the lock of his house, his identity is clearly established. Duska learns that Saxon is the world-renowned artist and has a wife who is very ill. When Saxon reaches his home he finds Duska at the bedside of his wife, who has just died. Duska respects Saxon's grief and departs, with her dream of happiness shattered.—Advertisement.

You do not want a slow treatment when hair is falling and the dandruff germ is killing the hair roots. Delay means—no hair. Get, at any drug store, a bottle of Zemo for 25c or $1.00 for extra large size. Use as directed, for it does the work quickly. It kills the dandruff germ, nourishes the hair roots and immediately stops itching scalp. It is sure and safe, is not greasy, is easy to use and will not stain. Soaps and shampoos are harmful, as they contain alkali. The best thing to use is Zemo, for it is pure and also inexpensive. Zemo, Cleveland.
