ELECTION RESULTS.

The national election held Tuesday was an overwhelming victory for Mr. Wilson and Marshall, with Theodore Roosevelt running a strong second, and with President Taft running a poor third. We are very sorry to see a democrat elected, for as a rule the democratic administration means stagnation in business and financial depression. It was true that Mr. Wilson did not get a majority of all votes cast, yet his plurality was large owing to the old adage that a divided house (as the republican party was) cannot stand. Yet the republican national convention at Chicago last June made it possible for Tuesday's results. The wishes of a majority of the people should at all times be respected. However, let us hope for better things next national election in 1916.
