

THE CITY.

CITY GLOBULES.

At Plymouth church, to-night, Lessons of the Southern Pestilence is to be the theme of discourse. The city treasurer forwarded to New York yesterday the money to meet the interest on city bonds falling due October 1st. The Catholic orphans' fair will commence on the 21st of October and continue one week. It will be held at Pfeiffer's hall, on Wabashaw street, opposite the market. A two-horse wagon, with the help of the horse to be sure, got on a rampage on Eighth street last night about 8 o'clock. But before any damage was done they were checked in their wild career. R. O. Strong, chief of the fire department, received a letter of thanks from the Firemen's Charitable Association, New Orleans, yesterday, for the $100 sent by the St. Paul department for the yellow fever sufferers. A large number of emigrants passed through the city yesterday on their way to Manitoba. They were well clothed, comfortable, healthy looking people of English and Irish extraction, and evidently of the better class of farmers. They were taken out by the St. Paul & Pacific line in six coaches. A. Guiterman, the enterprising proprietor of the New York Bazaar, corner of Jackson and Seventh streets, returned yesterday from an absence of several weeks in the Eastern markets. He is daily receiving invoices of his extensive purchases, and offers the finest variety of ladies' and children's goods in the city. Comptroller Roche has fears of becoming asphyxiated by a deluge of gas from agents with light for the city. He had a visit yesterday from four, each one having a gas-balance machine to generate gas. If their little machines are as productive as the agents themselves, Mr. Roche thinks he has enough light. The fish dealers of the city are "hacking" against the attempt of a Duluth firm to form a monopoly in fish. The firm in question, who have opened a retail store here and who also supply the other dealers, are trying to force up the price of fish to 10 cents. Against this the dealers kick, and are forming a combination against the intruding company and high prices. A discharged United States soldier made things lively on Seventh street last night, about 8 o'clock. He was on a high old lonesome. The feverish desire for a rough ride, as was his wont on the plains, seized him. He seized Mr. R. H. De Pew's buggy and horse, hitched in front of Knuff's block. He then started; the whole street and sidewalks were not broad enough for him. Such being the case, he drove into Mr. Dalrymple's buggy, smashed it, knocked his heavy loaded buggy into another, and sent a tumble into the arms of a policeman, who conducted him to the lock-up.

THE OLD STORY.

Love, Deception, Ruin—A Melrose Victim and a Physician in Limbo. When woman's heart is ignited with the celestial fire of love, why then—it is said one can easily come to over her. Prone at the feet of the idol she has erected in her heart, she is his; loving she confides, confiding she is betrayed. Thus runs the story. So, so often. She does not profit by example. She loves. She gives and giving she loses all. In the little country village of Melrose, distant from this city, a little more than 100 miles, a homely romance is weaved, which has resulted in the not unusual style. Dr. J. E. Campbell and Miss Stewart are the dramatic persons in this life drama. She claims that for two years the doctor has been "keeping company with her." She resided with her father, who is a respectable farmer, just on the suburbs of the village. Besides the unfortunate daughter, the family consists of four other girls and three sons. How the wooing was done, how the maiden was won, is but a repetition of the old, old story. One loved, the other pretended. Promises, at such times, are sown with a prodigal hand, and the whirlwind is reaped afterwards. Under the promise of marriage, the young girl fell. The doctor had accomplished his purpose, and the young woman found out the fickleness of man, and the depth and disgrace of her erring. Three months ago she came to this city and found shelter from the gaze of the world in the Home of the Friendless. Friday she was induced to swear out a warrant for the arrest of the doctor on the charge of bastardy. This measure, she claims, was more to bring him to a fulfillment of his promises than to visit upon him punishment. The warrant was placed in the hands of Detective Brosset. He served it and returned to this city with his prisoner last night. The young man was taken before Judge Flint and released on bond. When arrested he did not demur, and during his journey was not at all abashed by the circumstances of the case. The victim is a young girl about 19 years old. She is a fresh, handsome girl, in the full bloom of healthy womanhood. Modest in demeanor, gentle in manner, she is declared to be worth the wooing, and holding. The doctor is an extended young man longitudinally, about thirty years old, and is one of the only two, practicing physicians in Melrose. He has another story to tell, but it is willing to reserve it. If the story be true as related, it is to be hoped that "bless you, my children," may be the termination of the affair.

ARRAIGNED.

The Transgressors Appear in Court—Nearly all Reserve Their Pleas Until Monday. A man is judged by the company he keeps, and generally it is a very good criterion by which to judge. Then again, you know, there are exceptions to the rule, which don't always prove it. Clothes do not make the man, nor location always fix his peculiarities or characteristics. Clothes, though, do alter the appearance, and there are such oddities among mankind as pure cosmopolitans. The same man seen in church in good clothes, if associated with a gang of convicted stamped felons, will be commented upon as a villainous looking character. At church or in society the good clothed party would pass for the highly respectable citizen. Put his twin brother before a court, and ten to one, the public verdict would be, he looks like he did it, without knowing what. He is a hardened looking criminal "now isn't he," the comment that meets a general nod of acquiescence. In other words, "circumstances alter cases." The above homily had an application in the district court, yesterday, when the prisoners were brought out of jail to be arraigned. Had they been in front of a polling booth, they'd have been "very good fellows," charged with crime they were a "bad lot." Studied together in the court room, they didn't show up like a two-time-winner. But how did they look? The first person called to answer plea to having outraged the law was Wm. Harris, colored. He was charged with larceny. Harris slouched up to the bar, a lanky young negro, who would have been pronounced in "them agonizing slavery days," a very likely boy. He had no lawyer, wanted one, hadn't the requisite to employ, was without habitation or home, had no friends, was "a man and brother," who had just "grewed up." The court consigned him to Mr. J. D. O'Brien's care; and his plea was reserved until Monday. Next, Wm. Hughes, a raggy sorrel blonde, in seedy attire, was called. He stepped up and braced up, showing a youthful face, open and apparently frank. He was frank enough to plead poverty; said he wasn't guilty of larceny; he had relatives, but "they wasn't of no use." W. W. Erwin was given charge of the prisoner, and he was committed to the lock-up. Next, John Olson, a sombre faced, dark complexioned Swede. He had turned the 40 pole, and was a length of a year or two beyond it. Partially bald, he had adopted as usual the self-deceptive plan of hiding time's grasp by having a tuft of hair plastered over the vacancy. He was furnished up to the extent of his means, and the unprejudiced would have said "very decent" for him. He couldn't talk United States and another prisoner, John Osterberg, volunteered to do the phonograph business. Edison's invention is a greater success than Osterberg proved. The sheriff sent out for Mr. A. N. Nelson, and he got it out of Olson that he had nothing, but was ready for a divide. In consideration of his worldly affairs, his person was turned over to Mr. C. M. McCarty, who advised his client to reserve his plea until Monday. Next, John Osterberg. He is a muddly looking Scandinavian. Has lowering brows, broad face, high cheek bones, low in person, and from top to toe looks like a hardworking farm hand. If John were stirred up he would be a hard man, and has the surly look of one who would carry around a grievance, until the opportunity arrived. Then he would do the business with an inhuman indifference to results. He pleaded guilty of larceny, and had no use for a lawyer. Next, John Abrahamson, a sturdy looking Dutchman. Not a sociable fellow in looks, and probably prefers to take his beer alone. John, doubtless, is of an argumentative turn of mind, and would not stop to carrying the discussion to the point of blows. John would then put 'em in no consideration how powerful they were. Col. Irvine appeared for him and said not guilty to the charge of assault. Next, W. H. Sheffield. He showed up like a respectable looking mechanic who had gone to see by the use of liquor. Friends, homeless and moneyless, the court gave him W. W. Erwin as a lawyer, and not guilty was the plea entered. Next, David B. Barrett. He would be an ornament on any corner. A "masher" in appearance; tall and stylish in figure, his face is fully as good as the body carrying it. Black, neatly arranged, a killing moustache, black and a handsome suit of black clothes, Mr. Barrett showed up decidedly fine. On the street he would be declared good-looking, and school girls would stop to get another glimpse at the dashing. What he is a mainly looking youth, and he is deeply dyed, his looks don't show it. Mr. Barrett had retained the services of C. D. O'Brien. His plea was reserved until Monday. Next, John Scanlon. A hard-featured, hard-working Irishman, is John. "With a love of the crature was he born," and he has lived about fifty years, not to do much harm this late in the day. Mr. J. D. O'Brien had him in charge, and gave notice of a motion for a continuance of the case. Next, the awful lot were taken away.

Opening of the St. Paul Opera House Season, 1878-1879. Mr. Louis Malmsa, scenic painter, McKiever's theater, last week gave the finishing touches to the Opera house scenery, and everything will be ready for the opening night of the great artist Miss Charlotte Thompson in the very popular play of Lady of Lyons, on Thursday night of this week, to be followed by Hunchback Friday night, Jane Eyre Saturday matinee, and East Lynne Saturday night. We clip as a matter of news to some, from the New York Herald: CHARLOTTE THOMPSON. Her father was at that time, 1852, a New York favorite and engaged at Wallack's Theatre. He died in 1853, and in the following year his daughter went on the stage with her mother and brother, under Mr. Lester Wallack's instruction. She began by playing the smallest parts, but gradually grew into favor and was entrusted with roles of greater responsibility. She subsequently became leading lady in New Orleans, Philadelphia, and other cities. She began starring and for nine years past has been considered one of the most attractive actresses on the stage. She has, by industry, tact and perseverance in her profession, acquired a fortune of nearly $500,000. Her plantation of 3,000 acres near Montgomery, Ala., is acknowledged one of the best in the State. Her summer residence in Rockland county is a most delightful retreat, where as a genial and charming hostess she has many a gentlemanly brother and sister professional, and drives dull care away in a sociable amiability that is essentially her own. Meeting of the Boom Committee. There will be a meeting of the committee on booms at the chamber of commerce Tuesday next at 10 o'clock A. M. All persons interested in constructing a boom below the falls of St. Anthony, are invited to attend the meeting and confer with the committee. J. W. McCLELLAN, LORE WAGNER, C. S. ULINE, JOHN S. PRINCE, DAVID McCAINE.

THE CAMPAIGN.

An Excellent Meeting at White Bear--Speeches by Mr. Donnelly, Col. Crooks and Mr. Banning. Last evening, although the weather was murky and threatened rain, a large number of the people of White Bear assembled to listen to the address of Hon. Ignatius Donnelly. There were quite a number of residents of St. Paul present, who took this opportunity—the first in the present campaign—to lend their aid to the work of the canvass. At 8 o'clock precisely Col. Fisk called the meeting to order and W. W. Webber, one of the oldest residents of that section, and a staunch Democrat, was elected to read the address. After thanking the meeting for the honor, Mr. Webber introduced Mr. Donnelly as the candidate of the Democratic party for Congress in the Third District. Mr. Donnelly opened his speech by the remark that he would be brief, as others were to follow him. He had been nominated as the candidate for Congress by three organizations—the Labor Reform party, the Greenback party, and the Democratic party. On the main question at issue at the present time these parties were substantially in accord. In the remarks he would make he wished it to be understood that he did not blame the bank and the Republican party for the present state of affairs in this country. The leaders were the men who were responsible; the great mass of those who voted the Republican ticket were simply the victims of an outrageous policy, just as all present were. But he charged the leaders of the Republican party with the responsibility of the present state of affairs in this country. While a few years ago the people were prosperous and happy they were in the condition of bankruptcy. The trouble was that Congress had been run in the interest of the money power of the East. That influence had dictated the policy of the party, and that influence was prejudicial to the interests of the people of the West. He spoke of the manner in which the currency had been contracted during the past few years, and charged the Republican party with perjury to the interests of the people, and with favoring the cause of the bondholders. He also referred to the demoralization of silver, showing how it was accomplished by stealth; how the scheme had been devised by the great capitalists of Europe to get the people of the West into wrong, and congratulated his hearers on their final triumph, modified though it was by the efforts of Sherman to impair the work of Congress through his reluctance to give circulation to the greenbacks. Mr. Donnelly then took up the subject of the contest between the people and the national banks. He showed that the Republican party was beholden to the banks and was bound to maintain them. He criticized the speech of Mr. Hayes, in which he had sought to throw discredit upon the greenback, and by practical illustration showed how the people were forced to pay a large tax to maintain the national bank, when they might escape that tax entirely by having but one currency, and that greenbacks. He criticized very severely Sherman's attempt to retire the greenbacks and substitute in their stead national bank notes, but remarked that the banks were now turned, and that the people were determined to retire the national bank notes and substitute greenbacks in their stead. Speaking of the depression of business and the consequent army of tramps that had invaded the country, Mr. Donnelly contrasted the remedies suggested by the two parties. The Republican party wanted a strong government, which should repress the outbursts of the wronged laboring man at the point of the bayonet; the Democratic party wanted to stimulate industry by removing the hindrances to its development, and thus afford to the tramp an opportunity to labor, and give to honest toil its just due. Concluding, he spoke of his record in Congress and in the State Legislature, modestly leaving his audience to judge for themselves as to his claims upon the suffrages of his hearers. He concluded his address with some remarks, advocating the development of the natural resources of the country by the construction, with government aid, of railways which should command the trade of Mexico, China, Cuba, and India, and paid a compliment to the people of this country in Congress in behalf of the development of the country by these means. Hon. W. L. Banning followed in an elaboration of the themes suggested by the previous speakers. He thought special stress should be laid upon the attempt of the nation in gold to control the financial affairs of the nation. He showed how, by the investment of a paltry sum, men had been enabled to become possessors of a fortune, and how they had received from 16 to 18 per cent. upon their capital, and how now, when they had grown rich upon the accumulations wrong from the people they had grown so bold as to threaten to override the laws of Congress and the will of the people. He proved incontrovertibly that the people require a single currency, and that the only question was as to which was the best—the national or the greenback currency. Between the two there could be but one choice, and that was the best and the safest. It stood a better chance of redemption in gold or silver than the national bank notes, if such redemption was demanded, and was in every way preferable as a circulating medium. Col. Fisk moved a vote of thanks to the speakers, and the meeting closed upon a note of cheers and a tiger for Mr. Donnelly's gathering dispersed. All of the speakers were frequently interrupted with applause.

THE GRAND JURY. They Hold a Meeting and Consider the "Globe" Reports—A Much Disturbed Body. The conservators of public morals, etc., met for a short time yesterday morning. The assembly was more to hear committee reports on public institutions than anything else. Once together, the question of the Globe's daily reports of their proceedings came up for discussion. Great agitation was evinced over the accuracy of the whole, and the direct allusion to the minutest details of the work. Even among such notable and high-standing citizens, suspicion by look, each to his fellow, was, who is "the squarer?" They, one and all, were convinced that the daily reports were not conjecture. In fact, "the verdant" reporter who had scooped them in, as well as the other alleged newspapers of the city, was complimented for his "sagacity" and "sharp practice." The enterprise made manifest, was a surprise to them, a complete revelation in journalism. "How can he do it?" was the query again. And then dubious looks settled down on twenty-three countenances. It was suggested that the reporter, who had captured their secrets, beyond all conjecture—see reports and see indictments—should be brought before the grand jury to reveal his secret. Before reaching a conclusion, the grand jury adjourned. The matter will be resumed, Monday morning. It is the presumption that the body will adjourn sine die Monday morning. There is little or no business to further engage their attention. The case of Carl Anderson is to be disposed of yet, and after that the social evil question may be considered. The probabilities are that it will be ignored. The consideration of the question is being urged upon them by Rev. Wm. McKibben. But the fear is that to testify will criminate, and so nothing definite can be found against the evil dealers and customers in the sin.
