MINNEAPOLIS GLOBELETS.

The river is slowly rising at this point. Shipments of flour yesterday 3,610 barrels. Wheat received 21,600 bushels. No. 1 86c; No. 2 78c; No. 3 68c.

The funeral of the late Owen J. McCarty will be held at the church of the Immaculate Conception this morning at 9 o'clock.

The board of county commissioners went out to the poor farm yesterday afternoon, and officially accepted the new house from the contractor.

Brother Scott met the Globe man yesterday and kindly thanked him for his assistance in making the barbecue a success. No, thank you; we don't care anything, Bro. Scott.

The young people of the Seventh street M. E. church will give a literary and musical entertainment to-morrow evening in the church. The programme has been in preparation a long time and will not be very fine.

The improvements in Pence Opera house are being pushed rapidly forward. A large amount of work still remains to be performed, but the contractors are confident of being able to complete the job in time for Monday night's performance.

Members of the Emerald Benevolent association will meet at their hall this morning, at 7:30 o'clock, to attend the funeral of O. J. McCarty. A requiem mass and funeral ceremony will be held at the church of the Immaculate Conception at 9 o'clock.

Wagner & Cotton's minstrels will give one of their inimitable performances at the Academy of Music to-morrow evening. This troupe is spoken highly of by the press in all places where they have appeared, and they wish to enjoy an evening of fun should attend.

Rev. D. Cobb, recent presiding elder of this district, and for some time the pastor of Centenary church, left the city yesterday, accompanied by his family, to locate at Owatonna, having been assigned to that post by the conference at the recent session of the Minnesota conference.

Two of the Dominican fathers, Byron and Quinn, who have taken part in the mission at the Church of the Holy Rosary, have been ordered away to another city by telegraph. They will be long remembered by those who were present at the mission as two of the ablest speakers and most devoted workers.

The board of trade committee are in Litchfield investigating the wheat ring. Why don't one or two of them take hold of Mr. Wm. Blaisdell and investigate him for about an hour? He is just acting to be investigated, and will tell them anything to call and see him.

Fred Pluugschlag has commenced business on his own account by opening a restaurant and sample-room at No. 311 South Washington avenue. Fred is a good man, and the simple fact is that he has commenced business with sufficient guarantee that it will be run in good shape. He opens his doors at 10 o'clock every day, and will continue to do so.

And now it is Judge Rees who has consented to drag the probate robes through the mud. After a while people will learn that it is better to elect lawyers and not politicians to judicial positions. Washington has a good many chances desperate, and he will have the whole supreme bench on the war path yet if the robe continues to reach him in the same tone as last few days.

Harlow Gale announces a dime concert for next Saturday night. This, he thinks, will be the best of the season. Harlow promises in tomorrow's paper to publish a list of names of those continuing the cheap amusements. Meantime, let everybody freeze to a 10 cent piece, and prepare to go and enjoy an old fashioned promenade night, with its sociable features all complete.

Elsewhere the Globe publishes a card from Miss Pillsbury, who recently provoked some severe criticisms from the press and public because of her unbecoming punishment of her son, Miss Pillsbury makes, etc., etc., candid statement, but in doing so simply fastens upon herself the truth of the charges made in our editorial. Miss Pillsbury is a woman of justice. She is the unbecoming instrument of a vicious system; but probably the best of points is that she is a critic who will teach her caution in the future, and make it safe for small children to linger in her neighborhood. But there is danger of constantly repeating mistakes. No one desires to miss until the board sets resolutely down on the barbarous practice of pounding in the public schools.

Miss Pillsbury Responds. I feel that justice myself demands a statement from me of the nature of the trouble between General Rosser and myself. For some time past Gen. Rosser's children have manifested a disposition to settle difficulties arising between them and other children in accordance with their own notions, without reference to persons in authority. To such an extent the matter has gone that I have had to party, at least, sending to the Madison school could endure the matter no longer, and made an application to the board of education to have my children transferred to another district. The application was granted.

Immediately after the transfer Prof. Touseley and I held a consultation on the subject, and it was decided that the interests of all concerned would best be promoted by the transfer of the children to the Madison school. I am glad to hear that the children of Thomas and Willie Rosser and lay the subject before them.

Accordingly I called on General and Mrs. Rosser in the hope that they would meet the case in such a manner that all trouble would be avoided, and no more complaints of that character be heard.

I was informed at the house that Gen. Rosser was out of the city, and Mrs. Rosser sick and unable to see me. I had previously sent word of my intention to call, and she had assured me that I thought Mrs. Rosser would allow no such behavior, and would prefer to settle the matter with me. I had no intention of making any such charge, and if they considered themselves aggrieved at any time they would report the matter to me.

In less than two weeks the offense was repeated by Thomas. In coming to school he discovered the name of the teacher of the Madison school. He was so wroth with me that he shot at me, and commenced throwing stones at them. Thomas acknowledged the report that reached me of the affair to be correct; acknowledged he had not kept his promise, and gave his motive for committing the act to be "fun."

So I punished the boys in anger, for I was not until the boy resisted me I ask the janitor to simply hold his hands. I punished the boys with a small hand switch, using care to strike where no permanent injury could be done him. At the request of the president of the board of education, I called upon Gen. Rosser, after the affair, and justified myself and see if he had a correct understanding of the difficulty.

Let me say, by way of correcting some misstatements, that my intention was a simple and truthful explanation of what had transpired. There was no apology intended for the punishment, and I expressed regret that marks were made, and further, that physical evidence of severity were not altogether conclusive. I said to the father that the punishment was not a cruel, and, as it seems to me, so wrothly assailed, that I could not keep silence or say less.

If the truth could be known, the injustice that has been done would be regretted by those who have been parties to it.

THE MESS AT MARQUETTE.

It wasn't Tilden, but His Fool Friends, Who Made It.

The Grand Rapids Enquirer contains an article in reference to the seizure of the books of the New York mine at Marquette, in which appears the following account of the transaction, as given to a reporter of the paper by Hon. Marsden C. Burch, of Grand Rapids, United States district attorney.

The New York Mine company, owned by Samuel J. Tilden and W. L. Wetmore, Tilden owning a controlling interest. The business of the company was managed by Mr. Wetmore. Some time ago trouble arose between them, and Tilden fled from Wetmore. When the latter was displaced from his position he retained the books of the New York Mine company in his possession, and Mr. Wetmore, of Grand Rapids, discovered that Mr. Wetmore would be a valuable witness in the suit against Tilden for the recovery of an income tax liability.

Accordingly Mr. Sherman, the United States district attorney for New York, gave notice that the government would take possession of the books of the New York Mine company, and at present a notary public at Marquette is taking possession of the books.

A few days ago representatives of the government and Mr. Tilden proceeded to take testimony. Soon after the work began Tilden said he could not answer definitely any questions asked with reference to the books of the New York Mine company, and accordingly brought them into court, and referred to them frequently. On Saturday last Mr. Sherman finished his examination of the books, and the government's case was closed.

Mr. Wetmore for the purpose of getting the same in evidence at the trial in New York. Wetmore objected to the taking of the books to New York, but said he would permit copies of the same to be made, which he would deliver to the original owner, and to their correctness when completed. Sherman and Charles Harland, Tilden's attorney, made a stipulation in writing that copies of the books should be made and used in evidence, and then Mr. Sherman returned to Chicago.

On Monday last Harland, who remained at Marquette, cross-examined Wetmore all day, and the agreement among those present to take testimony and close the case in the evening. Mr. Harland entered Maynard's office quite early in the evening, and recommended his examination of Wetmore, taking up the books while doing so one at a time, and after referring to them placing them against his chair near the door. After the books had been deposited as stated, W. P. Haley, the local attorney of the New York Mine company, came into the room, and made inquiry as to the progress of the examination, after which he retired. Shortly after 9 o'clock a stranger—since ascertained to be one O'Leary, a laborer for the New York Mine company—entered the room, and without speaking to anyone, placed the books in the hands of Mr. Harland, who handed them to Mr. McCloskey (a relative of the cardinal) an agent of Tilden's. McCloskey ran away with the books, and although followed by Wetmore—who was lame at the time, and unable to move rapidly—McCloskey escaped.

Haley speaks freely and boastfully of the affair, and says he whipped the horses and hurried McCloskey away. After O'Leary took the books it was ascertained that Tilden's agent, McCloskey, had taken the books to the justice of the peace against Wetmore for the books, and that O'Leary—who was not an officer, but a laborer in the mine at Negawick, had been specially deputized to serve the writ on McCloskey.

Both Haley and McCloskey are in the honor of devising the scheme for taking the books away. Messrs. Wetmore and Maynard expressed great surprise at this movement, and Mr. Harland declared himself indignant.

Mr. Burch says proceedings will be commenced against Haley, McCloskey, and O'Leary for contempt of court, and that the bar of Marquette county will probably disbar Haley.

FOUR YOUNG HEROES. A Volunteer Life-Saving Patrol—New, the New York Times.

Four persons in this city are aware of the existence here of a juvenile association, the real objects and practical work of which are manifest in acts of personal bravery and humanity. Least of all, they would suppose that such an organization could be found in what are called the "slums" of the Fourth ward.

For nearly four months two young men and two boys have carried on what they call the New York Amateur Life-saving association and elected a president and vice president. They do not need a treasurer, and on the week they devote to his service in that respect being devoted to the making of entries in the "record-book." These young men are William O'Neill, twenty-three years of age, residing at No. 62 Cherry street; Glen H. Newberry, 20 years of age, 18 Cherry street; Edward J. Marr, sixteen, of No. 18 Cherry street; and Patrick Marr, age ten, of No. 7 Oak street. O'Neill is an overgrown boy in appearance, and has been known to rescue a drowning man, since he was six years old. He is a member of the blackens boots on the Sylvan Line of Harlem steamers, aiding in the support of a widowed mother. He has saved fourteen lives within the past two years, three being placed in his arms on Saturday last. He is a tinker, employed in a shop in Burlington street, and works in a Gold-street laundry, and little "Patsy" Marr is learning the painter's trade at a paint-shop in Peck Slip. Long has always saved four persons from drowning in the river, Kelly has saved two persons, and "Patsy" has rescued one. All are expert swimmers and divers, and a similarity of tastes and ambition probably led them into their noble career.

Nearly every day in the week these four brave volunteers meet at 7:30 o'clock on the Dover street pier. Starting there, O'Neill takes either Marr or Kelly with him and patrols the river from the dock-front down as far as the South Ferry pier, or the other way, long and the remaining patrolman go in the northerly direction and give their attention to the river front as far up as the "Hook." A little below Grand street Ferry, they have scraped together money enough to buy two life-lines of slender, well-sprung hempen rope, each about 100 feet long and provided with a cross-bar of wood, to which a person in the water may readily cling, and which also aids by its weight in the throwing of the line. They remain on patrol usually from two to three hours, always meeting again at the Dover street pier and reporting the occurrences of the night. Their plan of rendering assistance is to allow one to plunge into the river when aid is needed, while the other remains on the pier and aids the rescued and the rescuer with the life-line in getting out of the water. A part of their patrol duty consists in practicing in the throwing of their life-lines, always being ready to accurately to objects in the water. At present they say they need several articles of equipment, such as a life-buoy or two, and generally they hope to be able to get rubber caps and caps for their rubber night caps. These young heroes seem to feel some sort of contempt for men who need boats to save life, because they say that many persons have been drowned while others have been looking for a boat and running around for oars to go to the drowning person's assistance. They would be willing to have a boat themselves, however, because they would always have it ready for use, and they could patrol their respective distances in front of the pier, see greater distances, be more easily summoned, and could go over their patrol posts three times where they now do it once. They are fond of saving a person, however, is to go into the water after them, and support
