Pinarova was a success last night—it was Pinarova as it was intended by the author—sparkling, light, catching, funny and musical and not a ridiculous enormity of a burlesque with a middle aged burlesque woman dressed like a staidly, dirty, low class of thirteen.

All the talk about Dr. Danmorsor's bills is sheer nonsense and baby twaddle. The county commissioners fixed the price for each visit at 85 cents, and the doctor charges just that amount. The commissioners order each visit, and the doctor makes no visit without an order. The only trouble seems to be that the poor people will get sick and need a doctor and medicine.

The Minneapolis Turn Verein are arranging for a fancy fair. The lady friends are making immense preparations to insure this being the best fair ever given by the society, and it is hoped the public will rally in support of their efforts, for no society is better deserving than this of public recognition, and none is more ready at the call of charity and benevolence. The commissioners order after the mill disaster, and now that they want to build a new hall, the public should support them.

Thursday night at 11 o'clock Otto E. Greeley and Charles Waller took to the police station with a double rig—double seat, and double horses—the horses foaming in sweat. The chief was called out and a hurried whispered conversation took place on the policeman took his place in the wagon with the excited men, and as they drove off, Waller seeing a GLOBE man behind the chief earnestly called out—say nothing to the newspapers, it is a family affair. At 3 o'clock the men returned. The police are mum, the lively people are mum and Greeley and Waller are mum, but rumor whispers "elopement."

AN AFFECTING SCENE.

Tilden at the bedside of a Gallant Dying Soldier.

[New York Dispatch to Washington Post.]

S. L. Barlow, in speaking of the death of General Richard Taylor last evening, said that General Taylor realized the fact that his death was inevitable, and with his usual calmness, expressed a desire that his funeral ceremonies should be the most simple character. "If I die," he said, "bury me like a soldier on the tented field; I do not want a pomp, no floral offerings; lay me to rest quietly, and I shall sleep all the sweeter." During the day the residence of Mr. Barlow was besieged by visitors, among whom were many military men and a number of Southerners who fought under him about a week ago. Mr. Samuel H. Tilden called at Mr. Barlow's residence to inquire after the health of the General, whom he had known intimately for the past ten or twelve years. On hearing that the ex-Governor was below, Gen. Taylor's attendants have him shown up at once. His attendants tried to dissuade him, on the ground that in his critical condition the excitement of an interview would prove dangerous. The general insisted on seeing and conversing with the visitor, however, and Mr. Tilden was summoned to his bedside. The interview which followed was an affecting one. Mr. Tilden took the hand of the dying man, and expressed his deep regret at seeing him in such a condition. Gen. Taylor pressed the Governor's hand in return and thanked him for his sympathy. Mr. Tilden gazed for a moment at the dying face, and then, bending forward, he kissed the forehead. "No man," he said to Gen. Taylor, "has ever had a wiser, truer or more unselfish friend than you have been to me. Mr. Tilden shook Mr. General Taylor at the Philadelphia convention in 1856. He was struck with his wit, candor and other engaging qualities, and the two speedily became warm friends. During his subsequent visits to the North, General Taylor frequently visited Mr. Tilden, and the friendship, begun in 1856, ripened into a close intimacy. In the campaign of 1876 the general took a very active interest in Mr. Tilden's canvass, and was one of the most efficient workers in the nation that endeavored in his friend's election. Mr. Tilden entertained the highest opinion of General Taylor's sagacity, and particularly esteemed him for his moderate and statesmanlike views upon questions growing out of the late war.
