A SEDUCTIVE CIRCULAR.

A Contemplated Raid Upon the Indian Territory.

Washington Special (Feb. 11) to Chicago (Times).

For a long time there have been serious complaints made to President Hayes and Secretary Schurz regarding the action of white people in Indian Territory in intruding upon Indian lands there in such great numbers as to have everything their own way, to the utter exclusion of Indians.

A prominent gentleman of one of the Western States has sent to the interior department a circular, which he says is being very generally distributed among people of the West, for the purpose of organizing a colony to move into Indian Territory and settle upon lands there.

This circular is headed: "Last Chance for Cheap Homes." It states that there are 14,000,000 acres of land in Indian Territory belonging to the United States. This immense domain is public property, belonging to the people of the United States and open to settlement.

The object of the association is secretly distributing this circular to organize a colony of from five thousand to ten thousand persons and move upon these lands in a body on or about the 15th of March of the present year. Every family must be supplied with means of support for at least one year. They invite brickmakers, carpenters, and artisans of all kinds to join the movement.

They want a large colony to go to make an order to be strong, and to make sure they are carried out until such time as they will be powerful enough to secure favorable legislation from Congress. The circular gives a glowing account of how such a settlement would result in each settler owning his lands and giving them control of matters in the territory. Upon arriving at their destination, the colonists would be quartered at different points, in squads of fifty or a hundred, which would make them strong enough to resist any attack by Indians.

These squatters upon Indian lands propose to be very liberal, and see that the savages will not be distributed in person or property; they will be kindly treated by the whites, who will expect the same treatment in return. This advertisement for trespass upon these lands sets forth that and owned by the government are the only ones which they will attempt to occupy, and that there they will have an organization. They say they are only waiting until they number about ten thousand, and then they will move upon the country and take possession of the lands. They say they can protect themselves from Indians and soldiers will not be sent to interfere with them. Their description of the country is that it is the finest in the United States. It abounds in iron, coal, and minerals of all kinds, and the climate is delightful. As an inducement for joining their organization their circular quotes from the last message of President Hayes, in which he calls the attention of Congress to these lands, and says if a movement was inaugurated to enter upon them the government would be powerless to prevent. They say that the movement of the United States is the temper of Congress and the country stands at present, they would not be molested in entering upon these lands if they went in large numbers, and went to work industriously to make homes for themselves. Secretary Schurz says that they are very much mistaken in this, for if they attempt any such movement he will use every possible means to protect Indians in their right to these lands, which do not belong to the United States, but are held in trust by them for the Indians according to the conditions. President Hayes is also strongly de-termined that white people shall be kept away, and will, if necessary, use troops for that purpose.

CONKING'S POSITION. He is for Grant First, Last and all the Time.

Washington Special (Feb. 10) to New York (Sun).

I feel myself authorized to state that Mr. Conkling is not a candidate, presently or remotely, or in any contingency, for the nomination of President at Chicago. The fact may as well be understood first as last. Therefore, when some of his followers, who glory in the leadership of the Oneida chief, seek to make their devotion to his personal fortunes a cover for betraying the sentiments of certain localities which they are to represent as delegates to the State convention, they will find it a flimsy excuse for the treachery they intend.

Mr. Conkling is for Grant out and out, with no alternative, or second choice, or Grant and nothing else. Conkling's position, in all his walk and conversation, he is bold enough to avow this purpose distinctly and unqualifiedly, so as to prevent the possibility of mistake now or hereafter. To him more than to any other man belongs whatever credit attaches to the organization of the third term venture, which, up to the time of the progress from San Francisco to Philadelphia, was actually planned. A mistake, now admitted, was made when Grant was deflected from a proposed journey to Australia.

Out of the territory, and with a parade appealing to the imagination of the weak and the credulous, Grant was infinitely stronger than in the country, brought into daily contact with thousands, and subjected to public and private criticism. This discovery was soon made, and the managers started him off again on a new tour. The real reason for bringing him home when he did, was to give an impulse to the conventions in Pennsylvania and New York, which the engineers of the machine proposed to capture by calling them long before the usual time, and without allowing the rank and file of the party any fair chance to express their opinions.

This whole movement is a game in politics, of which andancy is the chief feature. It is the final test of the strength of the machine, as the controlling power in a great party, in defiance of the convictions of the best men who compose it, and in disregard of public sentiment. Mr. Conkling plays his stake and takes the chances. Success means possession of the government, absolute and uncontrolled by any outside considerations; and in case of failure, command over the treasury; unchecked expenditures, and a radical and enduring change in our institutions.

Great corporations, the old rings, annexations of foreign territory, adventures of every class and clime, speculators, gamblers in politics and stocks, jobbers of all descriptions, are enlisted in the movement, and reformers like Gen. Butler are engaged in promoting it. Grant went out of the way to make his Boswell publish a recantation of his official report, charging Butler with having been "bottled up" to become a great military man. Conkling brought that peace-offering about, and now he has for one of his surfs the late Democratic candidate for Governor of Massachusetts, who alarmed the Republicans as an enemy at the last election, and alarms them still more as a friend for the contest next November.
