A BOLD FREEBOOTER.

He Makes a Bold Run on a Whole Neighborhood in North Minneapolis—Wholesale Depredations.

One of the most systematic raids was made upon a neighborhood in the vicinity of Washington avenue and Sixteenth avenue north, on Wednesday night, by a bold burglar and clothes line thief. He began his work early in the evening and persistently continued his felonious career nearly all night despite many interruptions which would have driven away any ordinary outlaw. At about 8 o'clock the fourteen year old son of A. Pargel, a harness maker, at the corner of Washington avenue and Sixteenth avenue happened into the wood shed at the rear of the house. He heard some one trying the door, and going to a crack saw a stranger. The man saw him at the same instant and said "Let me in or I'll murder you." The boy screamed at him and his father came with a revolver. The man fled but Mr. Pargel sent a bullet after him without effect. A search in the barn revealed a huge pile of clothes taken from neighboring houses.

The thief then went to Mr. Norris' house over a pop factory on Second street, and by the aid of a ladder climbed into a window. He stole an overcoat, cap, blanket and other articles without arousing any one. He then went to the house of Mrs. Brightenstein over a grocery store at the corner of Sixteenth avenue north and Fourth street. Mrs. Brightenstein was on the stairs when he opened the outside door. The burglar seized her by the arm and demanded her money, or her life would be forfeited. The woman pluckily struck him a stinging blow in the face and screamed for assistance. The second thief then beat a precipitate retreat. The house of a Swede in the neighborhood was also visited. A board was torn from his fence with which a window was broken through which he entered and secured a nominal amount of plunder. The clothes lines throughout the neighborhood were cut and carried off with their contents.

Who Gave the Boy?

Young Thomas Donovan was produced in the district court yesterday morning by Mr. Friet, and concluding evidence taken, and at three o'clock in the afternoon the case was adjourned until nine o'clock this morning, when Judge Young will give his decision.

THE WICKED FLEA.

He Brought About Trouble.

As we predicted long ago, the practice certain girls have of wearing a small, shaggy dog in their laps is bound to make trouble. A case in point at Chicago will illustrate how the fatal practice of keeping a pet dog to kiss will break up the best of friendships.

A young gentleman who does business on the Chicago Board of trade was in love with a beautiful Washaw avenue girl, and it was believed by all that he would soon allow her to lead him and her dog to the altar, for she kept a dog. He was not very much miffed on the dog any of the time and it hurt him to see her caress the brute, but he thought when they were once married he would take the dog by his hind leg and knock its brains out against a lamp post. Her dog was a big dog, and that fact annoyed the lover more than would have been the case otherwise. But the young man enjoyed himself much, in pressing his suit, or his girl's suit, rather, of an evening, after the dog had gone to sleep and been put in its crib. He would sit on the veranda with the object of his adoration, and gaze out across the lake front park at the stately ships as they went by, and as one big ship would seem to be hugging close to the shore, he would hug her—close the ship—and she would hug back according to Hoyle, and then she would sit on his lap, and he would sit in hers, and then he would get nervous and go home.

There seemed to be something biting him. He could keep his nerve on the board of trade, though what went against him, but when his girl got against him he felt a yearning to scratch himself, a vague longing to go up and go away. He went to a doctor and was examined, and the doctor charged him five dollars for the information that he was covered with fleas. He could not believe it until he went to his room and got his room-mate to help him catch a quantity of fleas. Then his soul was up in a chain, and he was going to throw himself, dog and all, into his arms, with a frightened look, and a cry as though the house was coming down, he said:

"Stand back! There is that about you that crawls, and hops, and bites. You have got fleas!"

"Sir!" said she, her eyes flashing with fire, "this insolence shall cost you dear." "I have no fleas," she said, "but I have a flea of fleas" and the tears came to her eyes, but she wiped them away with the dog, and controlled her emotion.

"For months I have had something about me each time I went from your side that has made me pay attention," said he, mustering up courage to speak, "and I have found that it is fleas. You hold that dog, and the fleas leave him to meander about my system, picking him by day and going for me at night. When I come to you every flea comes to me for a square meal. They come forth like flowers, from your neck, your corset, your shoes. The woods are full of them, and my life is a burden, unless you swear off keeping a dog, and rid yourself of fleas, all between us must be at an end. It may be no dog and no fleas, or no like. Which shall it be?"

She thought long over the matter, her eyes looking into the future, but did not answer. He was a good match and was long on pork, but she could not make up her mind to part with her dear dog, that cost her $100. Finally a bright thought struck her, and she offered to compromise by using insect powder. His heart had seemingly been turned to stone, and he told her he could not consent to any compromise, and leaving the house, he gave her two days to decide. The next day he saw her at a matinee with a hotel clerk, and the clerk was constantly feeling up his sleeves or down his neck for something, and he thinks she still keeps the dog. Thus two hearts will be broken—Chicago hearts, too—by the poodle dog.

Useless Fight.

To worry about any Liver, Kidney or Urinary trouble, especially Bright's Disease or Diabetes, as Hop Bitters never fails of a cure where a cure is possible. We know this.
