The average daily product of the Minneapolis flouring mills has been about 19,500 barrels during the past week, and considering that a number have been shut down a portion of the time, it gives a big showing of what can be done. GRAND JURY. Secrets Deep, Dark and Terrible. The grand jury has been in session for the past two days and at a late hour yesterday afternoon they brought in some indictments, but so thorough has been the secrecy and so profound the air of majesty under cover of which their deliberations have been conducted, that all efforts to obtain the slightest inkling of their work and its probable results have been unavailing. In fact to keep up the total isolation of the jury, two additional men, Geo. A. Thomas and J. A. Robinson, have been sworn in and added to their guard.

A Tale for the Toddlers. [Chicago Tribune.] One day Lucy and her brother were going to the place where the ice cream was kept. Lucy was trotting along, holding Charles' hand. She heard a strange noise in the street near them. Looking, she saw a woman with a little scrou dog. One boy had tied a string to the poor little dog's tail, and on the other end of the string was a deserted oyster can. "Oh, brother," said Lucy, "see what the wicked boys are doing." "And then the tears filled her eyes, because she felt sorry for the dog. Then Charles asked the boys to let the dog go. They would not do this, but said they would sell him the dog for twenty-five cents. "If we buy the dog, Lucy, you can have no ice cream, for I have only twenty-five cents in my pocket," said Charles. Then Lucy was very sad, for she loved her ice cream dearly, but still she knew it was her duty to prevent the dog from suffering. So for a moment she was silent, and then looking up to her brother she said in her pretty way: "You kick in the ribs of the boys, dear brother, and I will hustle the pup up the alley." And so Lucy had her ice cream after all.

DEMOCRATS TO THE FORE. ANOTHER AMES CLUB ARMED AND EQUIPPED. An Enthusiastic Rally Held in Peterson's Hall last evening—Tingling Speeches—Dr Ames' Address Elicits Applause, Which Will Ring Until the Night of November 7. A Democratic mass meeting was held in Peterson's hall, at the corner of Washington and Fourteenth avenues south. The meeting was called to order by H. O. Peterson. President Matthew Walsh was elected chairman. He opened by making a short but pointed address in which he stated the objects of the meeting. The chairman then read the following preamble, which was adopted: SOUTH MINNEAPOLIS AMES CLUB. This organization shall be known as the South Minneapolis Ames club. It shall have for its objects: First—The holding of Democratic mass meetings during the present political campaign. Second—The election of Dr. A. A. Ames to congress, and the entire Democratic legislative and county ticket. The officers of this club shall be a president, five vice presidents, a secretary and treasurer, which officers shall form a board of managers. OFFICERS. Matthew Walsh was elected president by acclamation. He acknowledged the compliment, stating that nothing would give him more pleasure than by doing all that was within his power for the election of his personal friend, Dr. A. A. Ames, as well as the entire Democratic ticket. The board of officers were then elected as follows: Vice-presidents—John Landberg, Hans O. Peterson, A. H. Mitchell, Joseph Holtscher, Phillip Hartman. Secretary—John Lally. Treasurer—Jacob Martin. HON. A. A. AMES being called for stepped to the front and addressed the meeting. He began by tendering his thanks for the compliment in organizing the club which they had seen fit to name after him. He was gratified, and satisfied that the people would hereafter decide who should hold the reins of the government. He believed in the intelligent voting of the workmen. He meant by workmen people who earn their bread by their hands or heads. He believed in vox populi vox Dei. He proposed to deal in plain Anglo-Saxon language. The workmen of Minneapolis will no longer permit any one or party of men to make up a slate to which they should stand and by which they must vote. The speaker then treated the Ohio victory. He said that the people of Ohio had in their might abolished machine politics. The Republicans of the country are driven to taking up with schemes and issues that are far from the most honest and intelligent elements of the Republican party are deserting them and going over to the Democrats. He predicted that New York and Pennsylvania would go Democratic by an overwhelming majority. The New York Tribune, the leading and most influential paper in all New York, had predicted the downfall of the Republican party, and advises all honest Republicans to aid in its overthrow. It spoke eloquently and argumentatively against the dishonest machine politics of the Republican party. Under the leadership of Abraham Lincoln the Republican party had become a strong and powerful party, and well it might. The success of that party was from the same reasons which prompts the success of the Democratic party to-day. The sympathy of the nation welled out towards it. The speaker then read a number of clippings from the Republican press of the country, starting out by reading a clipping from the Pioneer Press and stating that it was an excellent counterpart of articles published by other papers throughout the country. It was money which had kept the Republican party in power. The speaker had no money. When elected to the office of mayor it was the workmen who paid the legitimate expenses of the campaign, at from $10 to $25 a man. The Republican party ran a system of assessments. Referring to the Tribune as a dirty, lying sheet, the audience sent up a shout which made the hall ring. Throughout his address the enthusiasm was tumultuous. Dr. Ames again referred to W. D. Washburn's reply to the speaker's challenge to the crowd in the platform in joint debate, and read extracts from the Washburn letter. He said that Charley Johnson knew that Washburn dare not stand upon the platform and answer the questions he proposed to ask him, and Charley Johnson is a greater political general than Washburn ever was or will be. Washburn has held two terms in congress but never has reported a word to his constituents—yes, a "Chinese letter." That is all he ever did in congress, and the speaker doubted if he ever wrote it. And the subsidized press now tells the people that Washburn is the people's friend. I will tell you what kind of a friend he is. He paid his men on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad $45 per month. I wonder if it did not break their backs carrying it home to their families. These men found they could not live on $45 per month and support families and trucks for high wages. The result was that the freight traffic on that road was stopped. The millers could not get their wheat. They sent Edward McDermott to Mr. Washburn and asked him to accede to the demands of the strikers so that they might get their wheat. Washburn replied laconically "No." Mr. McDermott then said: "We will pay your men three months' wages if you will permit them to go to work." But still Washburn replied: "No, they wrote it. This is the manner in which Washburn has befriended the workmen, [cheers.] The speaker then gave some very interesting statistics which comprise the records of the grand old Republican party, upon which Washburn plumes himself. Washburn says the voters of the district are poorer upon the issues, but the speaker would venture to say that not one in one hundred had a conception of the amount of lands being yearly confiscated by the Republican party. The speaker handled the river and harbor improvement bill, the bill passed by the last congress, the denunciation of which was greeted with cheers. An article for which Washburn had paid in the Minneapolis Free Press arguing why he should be elected had been translated and was read by the speaker. Dr. Ames mentioned the fact that Washburn was now worth $6,000,000 or $7,000,000, which was quite an amount to save from a salary of two terms in congress. The speaker went back twenty years. Then Washburn was the captain and

the speaker was an eighth corporal. Then the great rebellion broke out. Washburn made the first speech of his life. He said: "I love my country, Comrades," he cried, "go to the front and there expire fighting for the preservation of the glorious old stars and stripes. I would like to go, but my business will not permit me. Go to the front and I will join you as soon as I can fix up my affairs." That night the little company disbanded. All save its brave, valiant captain joined the regular army. Many of them won distinction and honor fighting for their beloved country, while others left their bones to bleach on the battle fields of the South. Now where was the noble "Gen." Washburn? He stole away to the pineries of the north as a surveyor, and did not emerge from their density until Gen. Lee had surrendered. [cheers.] "The lying papers state that I refrained from referring to the pine lands of the Red Lake district, in Mich., Pa., and that I did not will continue to speak of it. It is a national steal. It is the last of the people's lands and Washburn wants to throw it into the market. He conducted the only survey of those lands, Washburn and his stealing syndicate have their eyes on this land. Washburn is willing to expend $200,000 to gain his election. But thank heaven, the next congress will be Democratic and Washburn, expected, will be the victim of the pleasure of perfecting his gigantic steal. He alluded to the attempt of the board of education to present O. V. Tounsey $1,300, because he is a great Republican. He was to go to Austria, and then to control the schoolmarm of Minneapolis through the mails. The speaker stated that while he was working up the case, the old Democratic war horse Col. Glenn, was in the same thing in the city council. Col. Glenn is always an antagonist to thieving. "I went to that eminent old Democrat, who will some day be your acknowledged leader, Hon. E. M. Wilson, and the scheme was stopped. The speaker closed amid cheers and applause. A Novel Notion. Lieutenant Farrar, a fashionable young officer in the guards, dining with a friend in a Cairo restaurant some time since, was seized with a novel notion of mixing a sfaid in an Egyptian fez. A Hungarian at the next table with an Egyptian friend deemed this a deliberate insult to his friend and called out the young officer. The latter had no objection to fighting, but at the present solicitation of his friends he refrained. The ultimate consequence of the affair was that he was compelled to resign his commission in the guards, the duke of Cambridge in particular evincing the greatest hostility to him. The case is attracting great attention. Her majesty, who entertains a deep horror of dueling, has taken Lieutenant Farrar's side, and the young officer has addressed a pamphlet to the duke of Cambridge begging to be reinstated. "I am a Quaker, as you know," a Philadelphiaian recently said to me, "and it is reported that, shortly before Jenny Lind's visit to our city, an aged lady arose in one of our meetings and said she had heard that Jane Lyon, a very wicked woman, was on her way to this country to sing, and she hoped that none of the young people would be drawn away to hear her. Nevertheless, an uncle took me and my brother to the Saturday matinee. We had seats in the balcony and so near the stage that we could in a way see the singing. Early in the entertainment Jenny Lind sang, 'Home Sweet Home,' and the audience was beside itself. Among the members of her company was her future husband, Otto Goldschmidt. He was to the audience simply an unknown pianist, and to be obliged to listen to anything but the voice of Jenny Lind was provoking. Well, the man played, and from where we sat could see Jenny Lind behind the curtain listening most intently. When he had finished, the audience seemed in no wise disposed to applaud; but Jenny Lind began to clap her hands vigorously, observing which, my boys rose and began to observe her face light up—I can see the love-light on it yet—we clapped furiously until the applause spread through the audience. When he had finished playing the second time, my brother and I set the ball in motion, and the applause was great enough to satisfy even the fiancée of Goldschmidt." There is a young lady in town who is remarkable for her mechanical ingenuity. She is one of the prettiest, best educated and most accomplished young ladies in town and possesses the wherewith to back her accomplishments. "She can play on the piano" and make a big score in archery practice. The most wonderful of the many things at which she is an adept is her skillful workmanship at the cabinet bench. She has just completed a piece of furniture which will bear the close inspection of any cabinet maker in town. It is a library desk. It is made of black walnut and in the most modern and convenient style. The drawers in a like manner and way. There is some handsome carving connected with the piece of work. She has a full set of cabinet tools, including bracket saws of various kinds. She works with great dexterity and ease, and is just as good about planning as she is in doing work. Unlike many in much humbler circumstances she is proud to let people know at her works, is very proud of the handsome desk she has finished, and takes pride in showing it to her friends. The weekly papers are just now full of allusions on "the duty of the citizen." The duty of the citizen is to put on his lannels at the first cold snap, and then he won't have pneumonia.
