A JOYOUS SUNDAY IN MOSCOW.

THE NIHILIST THREATS BAFFLED.
The Emperor and Empress Successfully Adorned.
DETAIL OF THE GREAT EVENT.
A Royal Banquet and Illuminations and Rejoicing.

St. Petersburg, May 27.—The czar was crowned with brilliant ceremonies and without the slightest interruption of the programme.
Moscow, May 27.—At 7 this morning the magnificent ceremonies attendant upon the coronation of the emperor and empress of Russia was announced by the ringing of hundreds of bells and by the thunder of artillery. Even at that early hour the streets were thronged with people, visitors from abroad and from other parts of the empire crowding the residents and all striving to secure eligible places from which to view the procession and such portion of the ceremony itself as those not particularly favored might be able to witness. During the entire night, in fact, there was unusual activity in the streets, for not only were the people there whose anxiety concerning and interest in the coronation kept them awake, but strong guards of soldiers patrolled all parts of the city, giving the streets a very martial appearance.
Great bodies of soldiers shortly before 6 o'clock were stationed along the route of the procession, four miles in length and occupied the streets on either side, keeping the people on the walks. All unreserved spaces in the streets were speedily filled by eager sight-seers, while the windows, doorways and house-tops were let out at fabulous prices to visitors.
Those dignitaries of the realm who were to take part in the actual ceremony of the coronation, assembled according to programme at the Cathedral of the Holy Assumption, within the walls of the Kremlin. These functionaries entered the magnificent building at just 7:30 a. m. At 8 there followed in order, princes of foreign governments, nobility of Russia, and other states of Europe and special and regular ambassadors of foreign countries residing in Russia. The utmost care was exercised to prevent the admission of any unauthorized or improper person, each one as he appeared at the entrance being required to exhibit a carefully prepared ticket which was subjected to the closest scrutiny. This form was observed both at the gate of the Kremlin and doors of the Cathedral. At request of General Von Schweinitz, ambassador from Germany, eighty members comprising diplomatic corps assembled at his mansion and were conveyed thence to the Kremlin. The remainder of the diplomatic body consisting of attaches of the various legations, were assigned to positions in the tribune just outside the Cathedral proper. When the white walls of that wondrous place closed on all of the crowd that could be admitted, the choir of boys chanted the Te Deum and amidst profound silence outside the church as well as in it the clergy, accompanied by acolytes bearing the cross and ewer of holy water, proceeded to receive the Ozairewitch. This scion of royalty, who was in the midst of a brilliant cortege, took her place at the right hand of the throne.
When the imperial procession started it was made known to those inside the Cathedral by renewed ringing of bells, by sonorous music from scores of bands, and shouts from those outside. As the royal pair appeared at the doors of the palace the immense multitude immediately uncovered heads and burst into loud acclamations. Even women were bonnet bare and the enthusiasm was unfeigned.
At the head of the royal procession was the master of ceremonies flanked by heralds richly clad and mounted upon fine white horses. It was of immense length and comprised deputies from Asiatic states of the empire, students of the university, clergy, judges, nobility and prefects from every section of the empire. When the front rank reached the doors of the palace, it was met by the emperor wearing the white uniform of the colonel of the Imperial Guards and by the empress dressed in Russian national costume of black velvet richly embroidered with diamonds and girdled with a magnificent belt of precious stones. The empress leaned on the arm of the royal consort. The pair placed themselves beneath a canopy richly wrought in silk and gold and borne by thirty-two generals of high military rank. They then took their places near the head of the procession being directly after the regalia. At this moment the entire body of clergy emerged from the cathedral in order to meet the regalia which they publicly sprinkled with holy water and perfumed with incense. Upon entering the portals of the cathedral the emperor and empress were received by the metropolitan of Moscow, the metropolitan of Novogorod, and the metropolitan of Kiev who presented them with a cross to be kissed and sprinkled with holy water, first the emperor then the empress. Before the sacred images, which flanked the doors of the cathedral, they knelt and bowed their heads, after which they were conducted to the ancient thrones of ivory and silver. Alexander occupied the historical throne of the Czar Vladimir—Mozangne, while the empress was seated in the arm chair gilded and encrusted with jewels. Thrones were placed upon the dais erected between the middle columns of the cathedral. Over the dais was a canopy of scarlet velvet, suspended from the arched roof, embroidered with gold and lined with silver brocade, which was worked with arms of Russia and all her dependencies in a most ingenious manner. In front of the thrones were two tables covered with gold cloth, upon which were placed the crowns and scepter. None but foreign princes were accommodated with seats. The Russian princes and dignitaries stood during the entire ceremony, according to the custom of the Greek church. The dignitaries of the realm who were carrying standards and seals of the empire, took their stand upon the steps of the dais. After their majesties had been seated the metropolitan of Novogorod asked the emperor, in a loud and distinct voice:
"Are you a true believer?"
The emperor, falling on his knees, read in reply, in a clear voice, the Lord's prayer and the Apostles' Creed of the Greek church, the metropolitan reading:
"May the grace of the Holy Ghost remain with thee."
Descending from the dais, the following customary summons was then repeated by the bishop:
If there be any of you here present knowing any impediment for which Alexander, son of Alexander, and empress of all the Russians, of Moscow, of Kiev, of Vladimir, of Novogorod, czar of Kasan, of Astrachan, of Poland, of Siberia, of Kherson, of Taurida, of Groisje, of Geosondar, of Pskoff, grand duke of Smolensk, of Lithuania, of Volhessnia, of Podolia, and of Finland, prince of Esthonia, of Livonia, of Courland, of Saugilia, of the Tamayedez, of Bulastok, of Carelia, of Foen, of Ingur, of Perm of Viatka, of Eulzarja and of other countries, master and grand duke of the lower countries in Novogorod of Tcheneregoff of Riazan, of Polotsk, of Rostoff, of Jarasloff, of Bielosok, of Ondark Abbar-donsk, of Koslisk, of Viatsk, of Kostanoff and of all the countries of the north, master absolute of Iersk, of Kastalrsk, of Kabardinsk and of the territory of Armenia, sovereign of mountain princes of Tcherkask, master of Turkestan, her presumptive of Norway and duke of Sleswick-Holstein, of Stomarine, of Dithmar [and of Oldenburg, let him come forward now, in the name of the Holy Trinity and show what the impediment is or let him remain dumb forever."
After reading selections from the Gospel the metropolitans of Novogorod and Kiev again ascended the dais and invested the emperor with the imperial mantle of ermine, the metropolitan of Moscow saying at the same time:
"Cover and protect thy people, as this robe covers and protects thee."
The emperor responded:
"I will, I will, I will, God helping."
The metropolitan of Novogorod crossing his hands upon the head of the emperor, then invoked the benediction of Almighty God upon him and his reign, and delivered to Alexander III. the crown of Russia, who placed it upon his own head and assuming the sceptre and orb took his seat upon the throne. He then returned the insignia and his title to the dignitaries appointed to receive them and called the empress, who knelt before him. He touched her head lightly with the crown of the emperor, and then crowned her with her own crown. The expression and attitude of the empress as she knelt was one of sympathy with her royal husband, and touched deeply the audience. The czar preserved throughout a grave and decorous dignity and nobleness of demeanor which also provoked the admiration of all.
After the emperor had been duly invested with the imperial mantle and their majesties were both seated again on the thrones, the archdeacon intoned the imperial titles and sang "Domine Salvatum fac imperatorem" which was taken up and thrice repeated by the choir. Directly this part of the ceremony was finished the bells in all the churches of Moscow rang out in chorus. A salute of 101 guns was fired, and inside the cathedral members of the imperial family tendered their congratulations to their majesties. The emperor then knelt and recited a prayer, at the end of which the clergy and all present knelt before the emperor.
The Bishop of Moscow said aloud in behalf of the nation, a fervent prayer for the happiness of their majesties. Shouts of "Long live the emperor!" then rent the cathedral and were taken up by thousands outside and carried from mouth to mouth, until that part of the multitude who were unable to get inside even the ample average of the Kremlin, caught up the sound and waved it in huge volume of human gratulation to the remotest parts of the city, when it was speedily made known to all the world that another czar of the Russians had been crowned.
RETURN MARCH.
The cathedral choir then sang a Te Deum, after which the emperor ungirt his sword, and accompanied by the empress and numerous dignitaries, proceeded to the gate of the sanitary. There the Metropolitan of Novogorod anointed the emperor's forehead, eyelids, nostrils, lips, ears, breast and hands, at the same time exclaiming:
"Behold the seal of the Holy Ghost, may it keep thee ever holy."
The empress was anointed only on the forehead. Both partook of the sacrament and then left the cathedral, wearing their crowns and mantles, the emperor also bearing the sceptre and orb.
After praying in the cathedral of Michael the Archangel their majesties returned to the palace, escorted by the procession which presented even a more splendid sight than that which escorted them to the cathedral, being now accompanied by the gorgeous state carriages of the imperial family. Banners waived from all points in the Kremlin and the whole route of the procession fairly glowed with bright draperies and hangings. The emperor re-entered the palace by the celebrated red staircase, whence the laws were anciently promulgated. There he turned and saluted the people, who immediately uncovered their heads, cheering enthusiastically and blessing the czar.
THE BANQUET.
The imperial banquet began at 3:30 p. m. in the hall called granovitaya palata. This hall was specially restored for the occasion and was splendidly decorated with cloth of gold. The emperor and empress wearing their crowns sat at separate tables on thrones of unequal height, their majesties were served by distinguished nobles, acting as cup bearers, carvers, etc.
The first toast was "his majesty the emperor" which was followed by a salute of sixty-one guns. The next was "her majesty the empress" followed by fifty-one guns. The third was "the imperial household" followed by thirty-one guns, and the fourth was "the clergy and all faithful subjects" followed by twenty-one guns.
Foreign princes and diplomatists present stood during the first course and afterward in accordance with ancient custom withdrew to a separate repast.
The weather was fine throughout the day and everything passed off successfully. Silver tokens in memory of the day were distributed in twenty Moscow churches to-night. The czar's manifesto was issued this evening, and is a document of very considerable length. Crowds besieged printing offices to obtain copies, the principal of which caused great rejoicing. The manifesto announces the continuance of the present state of affairs in Russia, the conditional pardon of Poles, remission of penalties for non-political offenses, and other matters as previously referred to in this dispatch.

The czar has addressed the following receipt to Diggers, minister of foreign affairs:
The great power and glory acquired by Russia, thanks to Divine providence, the extent of her empire and her numerous population leave no room for any idea of further conquests. My solicitude is exclusively devoted to the peaceable development of the country and its prosperity; to the preservation of friendly relations with foreign powers on a basis of existing treaties and to the maintenance of the empire. Having found in you a constant, zealous and useful collaborator for the promotion of these views in the direction of our international relations, I confer upon you my order of St. Alexander Novski in diamonds as testimony of my gratitude.
Before their majesties left the palace the route to the cathedral was sprinkled with holy water. A heavy rain fell before their majesties started but just as they took their places under the canopy the sun shone brilliantly. In the cathedral it was noticed when the czar knelt alone to utter a prayer of intercession his eyes filled with tears and he sobbed.
THE SPECTACLE.
Mounted Cossacks patrolled every street, troops lining the route of the procession. The people remained abreasted the whole morning. Those unable to obtain admission to the Kremlin, remained outside on their knees close to the walls during the best part of the day, praying for the czar. A correspondent who has witnessed the greatest pageants in the last thirty-five years says, the spectacle culminating in the advent of their majesties crowned and robed, was the most imposing and splendid he ever beheld.
MISCELLANEOUS MENTION.
The cost of the coronation is estimated at 2,000,000 pounds, which will be covered by issue of treasury bills.
Only thirteen newspaper correspondents were allowed inside the cathedral during the ceremony, six Russian and seven foreign, the latter including one English and one American correspondent.
The academy professor and twelve Russian artists were appointed to make a complete album of the coronation.
Kremlin square was so densely packed it would have been impossible for any miscreant to have extricated his arms should he have intended to use them again to the czar.
The Czar's crown dates from the period of the Emperor Paul I and is valued at 5,000,000 roubles.
St. Petersburg: The coronation of the Czar was celebrated by special services in all the churches to-day and by part of the troops. The city is brilliantly illuminated to-night, and the streets are thronged with people. Perfect order prevailed.
BRUNN, May 27.—The Official Gazette says Germany has special reasons for taking sympathetic interest in the coronation of the czar. Family connection and common interests in peace combine to make Germany wish for a successful reign of the czar.
The Nord Deutch Zeitung says the coronation may be the starting point on a new era of happiness and peace.
LONDON, May 27.—The Times correspondent in the cathedral, says the ceremony was grand and imposing. My pen can give only a slim and imperfect outline of the event. Illuminations to-night are magnificent. The city looks like a mass of variegated fires. Audibly as he read, in making a profession of faith, the czar's voice was grandly resonant the Metropolitan of Novogorod almost broke down in delivering his allocution.
DECORATION DAY.
