

Buddhism and its Legends.

The Buddhist views of the universe indicates their origin in a pre-scientific period, when mystical imaginations took the place of accurate observation.

It is also said to be firmly clasped by them as by a pair of pinchers. The three rocks rest upon a world of stone.

Buddhist astronomy, physical geography, and natural history proceed in this absurd style, offering an easy victory to real science wherever members of the Buddhist faith can be induced to study it, and to apply its teachings fairly and honestly to the correction of this preposterous legend.

A third process of solitary meditation, if successful, removes joy, gladness and sorrow, and diffuses through the whole system a perfect tranquility; and after a fourth process of the same kind, all reasoning and all attachment to sensible objects being removed, purity and enlightenment of mind engross the Buddhist saint, like a garment that covers him from head to foot.
