WILL APPEAL CASE

NEW PROCEEDING IN TOWNER TEST GAMBLING PROSECUTION.

PREPARING ANOTHER PLEADING

Refusal of Writ of Habeas Corpus Not Decisive—Defendant's Lawyers Will Go Up to the Upper Court in Another Way.

The attorneys who have the interests of T. O. Towner in their care in the Towner gambling test case, though defeated in their efforts to secure a writ of habeas corpus from the supreme court and by means of that process raise the question of the constitutionality of the anti-gambling law for determination by the upper court, have not given up the case. They are preparing a new way by which to bring the matter before the supreme court, and they still have faith in their ability to knock the law out.

They are now going up on an appeal from Judge McClellan's judgment in the case. The appeal was being prepared today. The defendant's lawyers are ex-Governor Smith and Attorneys Parr, Sinclair, Wines and Levy. Ex-Governor Smith was interviewed today regarding what the next step to be taken by the defendant's lawyers would be.

"It is understood, governor, that the supreme court refused the writ of habeas corpus applied for in the Towner case. Does that conclude the matter finally?" Governor Smith was asked.

"It concludes the matter as far as the habeas corpus proceeding is concerned," was the answer.

"Then the case is ended, is it?"

"Oh, no; we are going to take the matter up by appeal today. We will appeal directly from the judgment of the lower court."

"In that way you will bring up the constitutionality of the gambling law, will you?"

"Yes, sir," the governor replied.

"Is there any statement that I can make about the grounds?" he was asked.

"No," he replied, "except that we consider the law unconstitutional."

The lawyer went on to explain that the refusal of the writ of habeas corpus did not determine the question.

"What was the reason given by the supreme court for declining the writ?" he was asked.

"From Mr. Parr I understand that the court did not care to decide a constitutional question upon an extraordinary writ. It preferred that the matter should come up on appeal," he replied.

Mr. Smith said that the appeal in the case will be sent over to Helena and filed in the case, and that it will probably come up for consideration in 30 or 40 days.

The defendant Towner, was fined $100 by Judge McClellan, and he is serving out his fine now constructively at the rate of $2 a day. If the appeal comes up within the time named his alternate term of imprisonment will not yet have been exhausted. He has furnished the sheriff with an indemnifying bond of $100 in cash to secure the latter from loss in case the matter is adjudicated against him.

In the Reynolds test case, in which Attorney Denny is the defendant's counsel, the writ of prohibition asked from the supreme court having been refused, the machinery of the lower court will resume operation presently, and the trial of the defendant, interrupted by the prohibition writ proceedings, will take place.

Deputy County Attorney Yancey, who took part in the prosecution of the defendants in the gambling test cases, said today that the county attorney's office would continue to prosecute the cases of all persons arrested for violating the anti-gambling statute.

The county attorney's office, having convicted Towner and sent him to jail, constructively, is no longer connected with his case, excepting as the supporter of the attorney general in any proceedings that may arise in the supreme court in which its help may be needed.

Ex-Governor Smith is not interested in the Reynolds case, but he represented the other four defendants arrested with Reynolds. He was asked today if the proceedings against these clients of his would be made test cases.

He replied in the negative, saying that one case would test all of them.

The continuation of the prosecution of Reynolds in the district court before Judge McClellan will be the next gambling trial of interest in the court here. There are several other new defendants against whom informations are being prepared by County Attorney Breen.

FROM FAR SIBERIA

LETTER REACHES AN OFFICER ON BUTTE POLICE FORCE.

IS ON PARCHMENT PAPER

His Friend Narrates Incidents of Trip—Customs of a Strange Race—Mining and Agricultural Possibilities.

Officer Parvye of the city police received a letter today that is, it is safe to say, unique in this country, certainly in Butte.

It comes from far distant Siberia, over the signature of his friend Norwald Douglas. Many of the incidents that transpired on his journey before reaching his destination are most entertainingly described, as well as a few of the customs of the country and its people.

But probably the most interesting phase of the letter lies in the fact that it is written on black bark with a sharp pointed stick. The letter is in English, and the characters perfectly legible. The bark is as light and pliable as many of the finer grades of stationery. The epistle comes via the Russo-Chinese bank, and is post marked Blachta in Siberia, Russia.

Douglas says that until he reached Moscow, and while on board the vessel, the days and nights were one long, unbroken period of wine, women and song, and that the people of the different countries of Europe through which he passed are very cordial to the Americans, extending every courtesy and making their visit as pleasant as possible.

The women of Russia, the writer says, are very beautiful indeed. On his trip from Moscow to Irkutsk, which occupied him nine days by railroad, they were much interested in him. Most of the Russian passengers on the train, which, he says, was crowded to its utmost capacity, displayed much curiosity about his gold filled teeth. Many of the young girls would shyly approach him, and by signs induce him to open his mouth, when they would gaze upon the row of richly embellished molars with undisguised admiration, and with many expressions of awe and wonder.

The letter contains a number of impressions of the writer. In the Mongolian inhabitants he was chiefly interested, in them and their customs. They are as a race very much opposed to the desecration of the face of nature. To such an extent do they carry this idea that they will not dig graves for the burial of their dead, but leave the corpse lying upon the surface to be devoured later by the great Russian wolves. Their women they consider in precisely the same light as they do their dogs, without soul or reason, and treat them accordingly. In speaking of the mines Douglas says the conditions are at variance with prevailing notions. The properties are not as productive as at first supposed, and then there are countless obstacles to be overcome in the way of shipment of machinery and ore. It took several weeks before the implements ordered could reach the syndicate of mines, of which the writer is an employee, and when they did finally arrive the people expected the miners to take out tons of gold in a day; when this state of things failed to materialize they grew dissatisfied.

The journey consumed a month and ten days, and in Russia the writer speaks of traveling through thousands of miles of rich and fertile land upon which it is probable the foot of man has never tread. He draws a contrast between the densely populated territories of China and other countries, and this great uninhabited stretch of the globe in which, for the poor people of the future, lie possibilities no pen can paint.
