EUPEPTIC GIRL STUDENTS.

Quantities of Food They Get Away With in a College Year.

Sugar and spice and everything nice have been bought in larger quantities than ever this year at the Woman's college to meet the demands of the greatly increased number of resident students. The contracts are made at the opening of college, through Mr. George Filbert, cashier of the Woman's college, and are given to Baltimore dealers.

The amount of beef ordered for the year is 21,000 pounds, of mutton, 8,500, the same as last year; veal, 5,000, and pork, 6,500. Poultry will be used in greater abundance than ever, the contract calling for 11,000 pounds, 500 more than was bought last year.

Three thousand pounds of fish and 200 gallons of oysters have been contracted for, and 4,000 dozen eggs, 6,000 gallons of milk and 8,000 pounds of butter will help to make life worth living. Five hundred bushels of potatoes and 300 cases of canned vegetables have been ordered and fresh vegetables will be bought daily as needed.

One hundred and twenty-five barrels of flour will be required to make the delicious rolls, muffins and waffles served at the college homes, and the contract forlard goes up to 4,000 pounds.

What can be done with so much sugar is a question, but there will probably not be a grain left at the close of the year of the 15,000 pounds ordered. One thousand five hundred pounds of coffee, 125 pounds of tea and 100 pounds of chocolate have been ordered. Two thousand five hundred pounds of crackers is what the contract calls for.

Is the college girl about to give up ice cream? May be a new woman question, in Baltimore, at least, the demand seems to be less. Last year the demand fell from 700 to 650 gallons and this year the contract calls for but 600 gallons. The fact that some fees and many delicious sweets are made in the home is, however, a factor in the reason for this falling off. Seventy-five thousand pounds of ice have been contracted for.

Fruits, jellies and pickles are all "put up" in the college homes, the pantry shelves of which are piled with jars of delicious things the college housekeepers are skilled in the art of preserving and the pantry of Vingolf, Fensal or Giltner hall would be a paradise for any small boy in existence.—Baltimore Sun.

A PECULIAR DIVISION.

The Geographical Peculiarity That Caused Controversy.

The Chesapeake Bay in Maryland, long the chief means of communication between the counties of that state, has recently become a geographical means of division between the counties to the east of it, which constitute the eastern shore of Maryland and those of the west which include a predominant portion of the voters of the state, giving rise to a political division which is duplicated nowhere else in the United States.

Between the Chesapeake bay and the Atlantic ocean there is a neck of counties in three states—Maryland, Delaware and Virginia—which terminate at Cape Charles and have more interest in common with each other than the states of which they are a part. Kent and Sussex counties, Delaware, the rural counties, are politically affixed to Newcastle, which includes the city of Wilmington, and constitutes the most progressive portion of that state. Accomack and Northampton counties, Virginia, are completely separated from the mainland of that state and include inhabitants who have little in common with other citizens of Virginia and are much more nearly allied with the voters of the states of Maryland and Delaware, with which geographically they are connected.

The ratio of illiteracy in these two counties, as in the Maryland counties on the eastern shore and in the Delaware counties in the peninsula, is unduly high. For a number of years the Maryland counties on the eastern shore claimed to be entitled to one United States senator and for many years this claim was sustained by the Annapolis legislature. More recently, however, the views of the residents of the peninsula have been disregarded. The claim of the resident of the eastern shore of Maryland to a senator has been abandoned, the votes of the representatives of the peninsula counties of Delaware for Addicks in that state have been ineffective and the counties of the voters of the two peninsula counties of Virginia against the constitutional convention have been overruled.—New York Sun.

An Opinion and a Story.

"The first time I ever saw President Roosevelt," said a Washington newspaper man, "was when he was a civil service commissioner. I was carrying the hod for a morning newspaper, and was given an assignment to see Mr. Roosevelt touching some civil service question. When I reached the gentleman's home I was shown to the library, and pretty soon Mr. Roosevelt walked in. He came to me and gave me a warm handshake, and went right to business by saying:

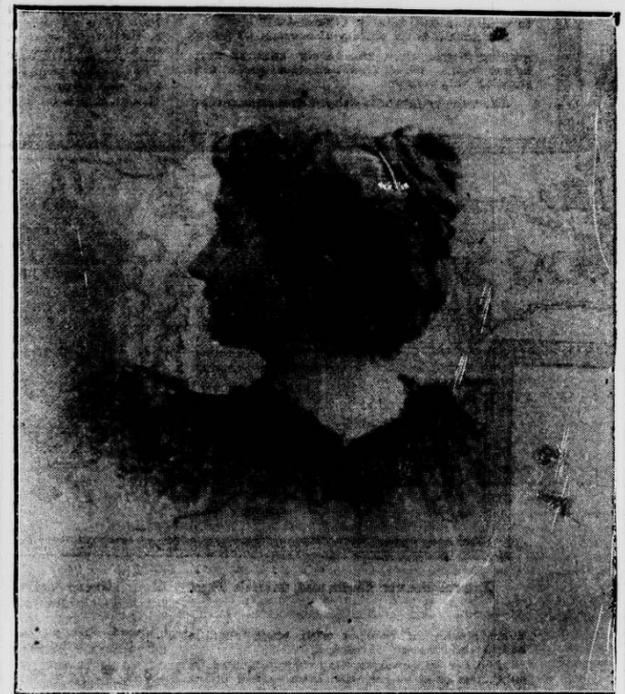

"I'm glad to see you; but sorry, my young friend, you represent the paper you do. The editor of your paper is an infamous scoundrel and unmitigated liar. Yes, sir, that's just what he is; but I know you can't help it. All heaven and earth couldn't keep him from being just what he is. Be good enough to tell him I said this. Now blaze away and tell me what you wish to know, and I'll do the best I can for you."

"And then, after delivering himself of his private opinion of my boss, Mr. Roosevelt gave me all the facts I wished, and the last word he said to me was not to forget to tell the editor his opinion of him."—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Payton Explained.

Corse Payton, the actor, who manages a theater in Williamsburg and writes and appears in his own plays, is famous locally for his speeches to his audience. Recently he appeared in the role of a Roman senator. Wrapped in his toga he stepped before the curtain between the acts.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said, "I am playing the part of a Roman senator. This is a costume piece and I have to wear these clothes. I have lots of other clothes, I assure you. To show you what kind of clothes I wear when I go to New York I shall drive down Broadway to the ferry at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning in an open barouche." Mr. Payton's drive was described as an "ovation" and his New York clothes as "a sartorial dream."—New York Times.

Anaconda Society

During the past week the attractions at the Margaret theater have drawn the society people out, to an unusual extent, and in Mrs. Bruness' "Theodora," Stuart Robson's "The Henrietta," and the presentation of "A Wise Woman," they have found an agreeable substitute for dinner and card parties and like social functions. So much so, in fact, that the marriage of Miss Cora B. Morse and Mr. Harry E. Stevens constituted the sole event of the week.

With the opening of the dancing season and the continuance of the work of the Woman's club a decided stimulus seems to have been given the social circles of the city and it will be but a few weeks until the winter doings of the 400 will be in full blast.
