MOTHER STOLE TO FEED CHILD

Pitiful Case of Destitution In Judge Boyle's Police Court in Which Nan Byxbee Finds Food For Much Thought and Comment.

"One touch of nature makes the whole world akin."

That touch of human kindness to which Shakespeare referred is sometimes called out in strange and unlooked-for places. It was in the prosaic and humdrum atmosphere of Judge Boyle's court room Monday that a dozen men, whose ears and hearts were hardened and whose pity callous to the oft-repeated pleas and studied stories of the criminal court, impulsively put their hands in their pockets and, with tears in their eyes, spontaneously gave financial assistance to one who was in sore need—a woman who proudly stood her ground and fearlessly confessed she had stolen—that her boy might have bread.

Judge Boyle's action in dismissing the case against Mary Morrison, who admitted her guilt of the charge of theft and declared in justification that she had broken the law to assuage the pangs of her hungry little one, was one that is typical of the merciful interpretation that liberal nineteenth century justice may put upon the law. The intent of the law was fulfilled.

The quality of mercy is never more beautifully exemplified than in the exonerated of one who errs—but errs through a noble and unselfish love.

Sin That's Excusable.

Man acts according to his strongest passion. When love for a hungry child outweighs judgment, reason and fear of the punishment and prompts one to break the law in all unselfishness, it is love indeed, and it would be a presumptuous and daring thing to condemn the act.

Who, indeed, may be held enough to say that crime was committed?

Human kindness and modern liberality of thought have triumphed over the old teachings of the narrow cults who would have had it that did a man lie to save his country, there would be sin upon his soul for the act.

Last Monday, when, in a broken voice and with face of stone, pale and drawn by hunger and suffering, Mary Morrison pleaded guilty to having stolen, offering no excuse but that her little one was hungry, she touched a chord of human sympathy that did not quickly cease to vibrate. Much sympathy there is that does not last through the moment from the hand to the pocket, but the sympathy in this instance was deeper, and the little boy did not go hungry that night.

Case Was Dismissed.

Judge Boyle dismissed the case and personally evinced a sympathy which sits on ungracefully upon the brow of justice.

Pride, hunger, the hunted feeling, and the maelstrom of other contending emotions which came upon the soul tried by fire, may lead to unnatural and preposterous conclusions, but the one who judges with an eye more to mercy than to the strict and literal requisit of the law, goes not far astray in the intent of things.

An ancient judge, before whom a man was arraigned for stealing a horse by sale of which his family were saved from starvation, wisely remarked that it were better that a family should eat than that one man should ride.

Jean Valjean, in Hugo's immortal Les Miserables, served over 20 years in gally and dungeon for the mere stealing of a loaf of bread, the original conviction bringing with it a claim of enforced offenses that kept the unfortunate in servitude until his hair was white and caused him to be hunted to the grave.

Poverty Was Criminal.

Dickens pictures a like cruelty. Little Dorrit's father lived and died in a debtor's prison for a petty indebtedness.

Men were once tortured and broken on the wheel for personat malice or in a spirit of fanaticism, and in our own country not many years ago, helpless old women were put to death for supposed witchcraft.

Once, to be poor was to be criminal, because debt, the almost inevitable consequence of poverty, was criminal in the eyes of the law.

Such a scene as that in Judge Boyle's court reminds me that we are in a broad and liberal age, and that the best of human nature is left to us. Notwithstanding the commercial tendency of the year 1902, men are yet sympathetic and the human heart is open to the appeal of genuine distress. The curdling influence of modern progress has yet failed to sour the milk of human kindness.

NAN BYXBEE.

HORDES OF LITTLE ONES FORM A UNIQUE PARADE

Eating Candy and Cream, They March the Streets—Ingenious "Ad" of a Merchant.

Perhaps it was a clever advertising scheme which a local candy merchant conceived and carried out yesterday afternoon. At any rate it formed the source of an unusual amount of amusement and pleasure for 300 children for an hour or two.

Thronged of little toulers of ages ranging from 5 to 10, paraded the streets, each with a pound of candy and a plate of ice cream. The line of march was not regularly arranged and there was no band. At times the procession had the semblance of regularity. At times it was a very disorganized mob. Some youngsters' candy or ice cream ran short and he immediately proceeded to levy from his neighbor. As the ice cream ran out rather frequently this entailed an endless number of free fights in which ice cream, candy and children were hopelessly blended.

One of the most pugnacious members of the parade was a boy of about 9, for whom one ragged suspender held up a very tattered pair of overalls which saved him from nakedness.

His capacity for candy and cream was something marvelous. After preying upon most of the smaller boys in his immediate vicinity and consuming their shares, he ventured down the line, where he met with an inglorious defeat in endeavoring to convince a redheaded youth from Duluth Gulch that candy was bad for his stomach.

Many of the children enjoyed the treatment; many of them remembered it during the watches of the night.

BIAS CHARGED AGAINST JUDGE

Sullivan Says O'Connor Cannot Try His Case Fairly.

Judge McClerman has granted a writ of review, made returnable June 30, and which was applied for by James Sullivan.

Sullivan was arrested June 11 on a warrant issued by Justice O'Connor charging him with disturbing the peace. The warrant was issued at the instance of B. S. Thresher.

Sullivan applied for a change of venue June 12 and June 14 the justice issued a second warrant and fixed the bonds at $500. The basis of complaint by Sullivan is that the justice exceeded his authority in ordering the second arrest and sets forth the following additional reasons:

"I have good reason to believe and I do believe, that I cannot have a fair and impartial trial before M. J. O'Connor who is the justice of the peace about to try my case, by reason of the prejudice and bias of said justice against this affiant, and the said prejudice and bias of the said justice to the complaining witness in this case, and by reason of the fact that this affiant refused to submit to the unlawful extortion of the sum of $4.40 attempted by the said justice against this affiant on the 10th day of June, 1902, and for the further reason that the said justice has a dislike to this affiant."

OZBORN CASE AIRED IN COURT

Judge Arnold Called on to Settle Domestic Troubles.

Troubles of the Ozborns are still in the courts. The case in the police court was disposed of by Judge Boyle in the effort to bring about a reconciliation between husband and wife, but the judge's efforts went for nothing when Mrs. Ozborn filed a complaint before Justice Arnold charging W. A. Ozborn with threatening to do her bodily harm.

An attempt will be made to have Ozborn placed under bonds to keep the peace.

The trial of Ozborn on charges of threatening to do his wife bodily injury will be held before Justice Arnold at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

SECURED SOME TROUT EGGS

Fish Hatchery Superintendent W. F. Jarvis Passes Through Butte.

W. F. Jarvis of Bozeman, an employee of the United States fish hatchery, passed through the city today en route from Henry's lake to his home. Being an old friend of Judge Clancy's, he stopped in this city a few hours for the purpose of seeing the judge and talking over the times when they used to hunt raccoons and drink sweet cider together in old Missouri, but to receive Mr. Jarvis.

The gentleman from Bozeman spent three months at the lake and while there captured about 1,000,000 spotted trout eggs to be used in stocking some stream or lake elsewhere.

The eggs were shipped to Bozeman and are now in charge of the superintendent of the fish hatchery at that place.
