A Famous Nag.

How the old nags turn up at the horse shows is again illustrated by the renewed triumph of Mr. Prescott Lawrence's venerable black beauty, Fashion, in the stallion class. Who doesn't know Fashion, now 24 years old, and imported about the time of the first horse show ever held in this country? Fashion's picture has furnished the model for about all the fancy horse pictures from that day to this. Nevertheless, the reports say that Fashion showed up again this time with all his old style, and pranced over the tank as of yore, wearing a collar of prize medals, game to the last, although he has to be nursed now on soft food, as his teeth are gone and oats and hay are too much for him. They say this was Fashion's positively last appearance in any ring. However, perhaps it would be better to wait and see.

Here and There in Bookland.

Mr. F. Marion Crawford has turned to the scene of some of his greatest successes for the plot in his new novel, "Cecilia; a Story of Modern Rome," which the Macmillan company will publish this month.

"Love Songs and Other Poems," by Owen Innsly, is one of the latest offerings of the Grafton Press of New York. The volume is divided into three parts: (1) Love poems and sonnets; (2) miscellaneous; (3) translations from the Spanish of Gustavo Becquer. It is neatly bound and will well repay the student of thoughtful, earnest, artistic verse.

"The Garden of Lies," by Justus Miles Forman, is the striking title of a romantic story of love and adventure in modern Paris. A beautiful American girl is the heroine. There is a medley of plot, intrigue, jealousy and idyllic love, and some clash of swords. It is a striking and original story, exciting, engaging and well worth while. (The Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York. $1.50.)

"Our Benevolent Feudalism" is the title of W. J. Ghent's book, to be published by the Macmillan company. The work is an elaboration of an article, "The Next Step; a Benevolent Feudalism," which appeared in the New York Independent, April 3, 1902.

Although less than a month published, Richard Harding Davis' novel, "Captain Macklin," is already third on the list of the best-selling books in New York City.

In "Border Brights and Fighters," Cyrus Townsend Brady completes the trilogy of "fighting histories," of which the others are "American Fights and Fighters" and "Colonial Fights and Fighters," all three being published by McClure, Phillips & Co.

"Memories of Vaillana," by Mrs. Isobel Strong and Lloyd Osbourne, is in preparation by Charles Scribner's Sons. The authors of this book of recollections are the stepchildren of Robert Louis Stevenson. Their descriptions, anecdotes and pictures are said to add to the knowledge of the personality of Stevenson. The volume contains reminiscences of their life in Stevenson's Samoan home and elsewhere on the island.

S. Weir Mitchell, in spite of his 72 years, is still actively at work along many lines. A new essay, "Heroism in Everyday Life," will appear next month.

Miss Alice Woods' is a new Indiana author whose first book, "Edges," will appear the last of the month from the Bowen-Merrill company. Miss Woods' story is of American and Parisian painters' life and includes a delicate romance.

Strangest Man in America.

Concerning George Francis Train, whose autobiography D. Appleton & Co. have just published, the following bits of information are given out at this time:

"He was once the best-known American on the face of the globe.

"He organized the clipper-ship line that sailed around Cape Horn to San Francisco and made American shipping lead the world.

"He organized the Credit Mobilier and the Union Pacific railroad.

"He was one of the organizers of the French Commune.

"He built the first street railway in England.

"He has been the business partner of queens, emperors and grand dukes, the familiar friend of the greatest people of the earth.

"He has been in jail 15 times, from the Tombs to the Bastille, and never committed a crime.

"He has made more than 70 ocean voyages. He has broken the around-the-world record three times.

"He formerly lived in a villa and spent $2,000 a week in maintaining it. Now he lives at the Mills hotel, at a total expenditure of $3 a week.

"He is Citizen George Francis Train.

"In one respect, at least, it is probably the most remarkable autobiography ever written. It contains more than 100,000 words, and Mr. Train dictated it in exactly 35 hours.

"Citizen Train wrote this wonderful story of a wonderful life on the top floor of the Mills hotel, where he occupies a room possibly eight feet long and six feet wide, and where he receives his callers with a dignity, a graciousness and native hospitality that would be in keeping with the fine homes he used to live in. He has lived in that room for four years, ever bed, a dresser, a tiny table, one chair and half a dozen paper boxes."

How Long, How Long.
[Chicago Inter Ocean.]

How many more murders will have to be committed by anarchists, how many more public servants brutally slain, into how many of their own throats the knife will have to be thrust before the people of Chicago and the United States wake up and stamp out anarchists as they would any other species of murderous vermin?

George S. Buxton, a friend of Charles Dickens and at one time a playmate of Queen Victoria, died recently in Rockford, Ill.

LITERARY NEWS

Unique Stories in Smart Set.

The Smart Set for December opens with "Winning Him Back," by Anita Vivanti Chartres, in which the author has achieved that most difficult of literary tasks, a story in which true humor is sustained from the first page to the last, without any interval of dullness. The plot is as simple as it is ingenious and distinctive, while the characters are sketched with consummate skill, so that their every word and action are convincingly human. The rare merit of this story deserves highest praise.

"The Explorer," by Mary Tracy Earle, which follows the novelette, is a complete contrast to it in the theme and treatment, but of equal excellence for the skill with which a child's ingenious viewpoint is subtly interpreted.

The Viscount de Santo-Thyrso contributes an essay, "American Women and American Men," in which this former Portuguese minister to the United States shows true insight and much wit in his characterization of Americans. Edgar Saltus writes with even more than his accustomed brilliancy, under the title, "Claret and Cream."

There are just 50 items in the total contents, and this does not include the capital jests and epigrams scattered through the pages. As a whole, this issue of the magazine is the best number of the Smart Set yet published—no higher praise could be given.

In the Days of the Revolution.

"On Guard," whose author is J. P. True, and which is published by L. H. Brown & Co. of Boston, is the stirring title of a stirring book, the third and last of the so-called Stuart Schuyler series—imaginative tales of the American revolupretty love story entitled, "Black or Red?"

John Gilmer Speed writes entertainingly and with impartiality about "The Bachelor Maid." The first story that Edgar Saltus has published in a long time appears in this number under the title, "The Dear Departed." It is characterized by all the power and grace habitual to Mr. Saltus' fiction. A very original little essay by Arnold Golsworthy is entitled, "Excusable Crime," and deals with the delight audiences take in seeing murder and assassination on the stage.

John D. Barry in "The Preacher," tells a very strong story that would make an admirable one-act play for such an actress as Mrs. Patrick Campbell. One of the longer stories is "The Claimant's Statement," by Frederick L. Cowie. It is perhaps the most touching and human feature in the whole magazine. "The Wasps' Dance," by Prince Vladimir Vaniatsky, has an exotic flavor. "The Seven Ages of Love," by Dorothy Dix, is infused with real American humor and old-fashioned sense. "New York's Sunday Dinner," by Kate Masterson, is bright and snappy reading.

In all there are about thirty-five contributions to the Christmas Ainslee's. Among the authors included in it are Sir Edwin Arnold, Henry M. Blossom, Jr., Joaquin Miller, Caroline Duer, Ethel Wattle Mumford, Lady Violet Greville and Josephine Dixon.

Leslie's Monthly for December.

A special number of a 10-cent magazine so enlarged and beautified that it becomes an edition de luxe of its old ordinary self, with its value as well as its price raised to 25 cents, is an attractive innovation. In Leslie's Monthly for December the con-

HE FOUNDED HOME FOR EX-CONVICTS

L. S. COFFIN.

SPECIAL TO THE INTER MOUNTAIN.

Des Moines, Nov. 29.—L. S. Coffin has endeared himself to the unfortunate people of the Hawkeye state by founding a home for ex-convicts. Coffin has long been contemplating this step and recently confirmed the project. The philanthropist will establish an asylum where those who have been under the ban of the law can take refuge after their release. In this way Mr. Coffin hopes to contribute his aid to society by relieving it of the unfortunate who cannot find any place or confidence on their re-entrance into the world.

tion which follow the fortunes and adventures of a stalwart young American, trained under Washington himself. Stuart Schuyler, formerly a private, then a captain and, in this present volume, a major, with promise of promotion, makes a worthy and manly hero. He faces danger bravely. He does his duty as best he can, and in General Greene's campaign against Cornwallis he is able to render valuable assistance. The narrative is one of constant action; the style is crisp and spirited. The descriptions, especially of the battle scenes, are admirable.

There is also a bit of a love story, toward the close of the book, between Stuart and the pretty daughter of a Massachusetts family, which gives a peaceful ending to a story of strife. "On Guard" is an excellent book for boys, with undeniable interest also for older readers.

By a Popular Writer.

"Winslow Plain," by Mrs. Sarah P. McL. Greene, is, like her previous novels, "Vests of the Basins" and "Flood-Tide," a story of life in a little New England village. The scene is laid about half a century ago, and the life of the villagers in that time is presented in the several types of character in the story. Patience Haskell, a sweet and womanly maiden, with a broader mind and more liberal ideas than her neighbors, who were brought up in strict subjugation to a narrow creed, had a lover in whose future she believed, but who was under an unjust suspicion of wrong-doing that shadowed her love.

He went away to the city, still worshipping her, but believing his love was not returned. Then disclosures came, the wrong was righted, the lover returned, but the work of Patience Haskell was done. She had been a beneficent influence in the village, and she passed away to another world with the love at last of even those who had misunderstood her.

Mrs. Greene has a frank sense of humor, and although the end of the story is disappointing to those who insist that a love tale should end in the marriage of the lovers, she will be forgiven on account of the enjoyable way in which the tale is told. Harper & Brothers, publishers.

Fund of Good Matter.

Ainslee's for December opens with a very dramatic story of modern life, entitled "The Unequal Yoke," by Neilh Boyce. The plot of the story is founded on the marriage of an American heiress to an Italian marquis, with lineage but no money. The story is told in the words of the heroine, and has a distinct air of biography. This, of course, is a high compliment to the author's artistic power. Molly Elliot Seawell contributes a very tents fully justified the temporary rise in price. The increased number of pages are partly filled by stories by Ralph Connor, Eden Philpotts, Harry Stillwell Edwards, and with a tale by Egerton Castle, printed in tint, and another by Seumas MacManus, on colored paper. There are a series of full-page drawings, by Reginald Birch, John C. Clay, W. Glackens, Florence Scovel Shinn, Howard Giles, Ladislav Benda and John Wolcott Adams.

The second theatrical article, "The Dress Rehearsal," with its illustrations from Byron's collection of photographs, is even fuller of amusing anecdote and theatrical gossip than the first one of the series. A more serious side of dramatic criticism is represented by a critical article on Julia Marlowe.

There is a rattling good football story, by Edwin Oviatt, and some excellent Christmas verse by F. L. Stanton, Emmett Campbell Hall and Ellis Parker Butler, while the Marginalia stories are worthy of the number and the season.

LITERARY NOTES.

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps' latest novel "Avery," recently appeared in serial form in Harper's Magazine under the title of "His Wife."

Charles E. Brock, the well-known English caricaturist, has been at his best in illustrating Mrs. Wiggins' "Penelope's Experiences in Ireland." His cabbies, boatmen, farmers and waitresses are delightfully true to the soil of Erin.

The much-talked-of dramatization of Mary Johnston's last novel, "Audrey," was produced at the Madison Square Theater, New York, on November 18. Eleanor Robson has the title role.

The "Life of Prescott," in the American Men of Letters Series, will be written by Rollo Ogden, one of the editors of the New York Evening Post.

Frank Leslie's has so much faith in the unsolvable mystery contained in Anna Katherine Green's new detective story, which it has just begun, that it offers a reward of $1,000 for the first successful solution sent in before the story is finished, three months hence.

Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, in spite of his 72 years, is a hardworking man. He is a frequent contributor to the columns of the Century Magazine, is the author of many medical works, writes a novel every once in a while and is yet actively engaged in the practice of his profession.

J. Pierpont Morgan appears to be turning his attention to literature. He has lately purchased the manuscript of Ruskin's "Seven Lamps of Architecture" and paid the large price of $25,000 for it.
