Bring some old book—the Romance of the Rose; That sang through which the wind of morning blows, Let me stretch out at friends with life at last, Forgetting all the clamors of the past—The broken dream, the flying word unjust, The failure and the friendship gone to dust.

—Edwin Markham, in Century for July.

"I pray you, O excellent wife, not to cumber yourself and me to get a rich dinner for this man or this woman who has alighted at our gate, nor a bed-chamber made ready at too great a cost. These things, if they are curious in, they can get for a dollar at any village. But let this stranger, if he will, in your looks, in your accent and behavior, read your heart and earnestness, your thought and will, which he cannot buy at any price in any village or city, and which he may well travel fifty miles and dine sparingly and sleep hard in order to behold. Certainly, let the board be spread and the bed be dressed for the traveler; but let not the emphasis of hospitality lie in these things. Honor to the house where they are simple to the verge of hardship, so that there the intellect is awake and reads the laws of the universe."—Emerson.

Atlas Club Program. Judging from the rush with which club programs are coming to the front these days it would seem as though the next club season will be full of work. There may be a great deal of pleasure in store for those who attend, because the subjects chosen in all the clubs are so widely varied that everyone is sure to be pleased with some one or many of them. The Atlas club program, which appeared this week is a pretty little conceit in its cover of green, tied with green ribbon and the booklet printed on yellow paper. It is filled with such a list of addresses as that it might be appalling to any but members of that intellectual club. The motto of the club reads: "Attempt the end and never stand in doubt; Nothing's so hard but search will find it out." This is carried out in the list of subjects set before the aspirant for club culture. Literature, American history and Mexican history will be delved into and talked about next winter, and no doubt when the springtime comes the members will be ready for a long rest after so strenuous a winter.

LITERARY NEWS

The Pilgrim for August. The Pilgrim for August appears in a striking cover design by W. H. D. Koerner. Indeed, it is not too much to say that no summer issue of an American magazine ever was more charmingly garbed. The first article is entitled, "The Great White Shepherd of Rome," it being an interview with Pope Leo obtained not long since, an added interest in which is due to the fact that it is the only interview ever afforded a journalist by the aged pontiff. A second article of decided interest is by Henry D. Lloyd, noted as sociologist and student of economics, who writes of "The Public and the Coal Question." The issue contains several illustrated articles of a lighter nature, among which may be enumerated, "Bohemia and Bohemians of Yesterday," by James L. Ford; "A Hot Night in Chicago," by Kenneth Herford; "Cycling Through Tuscany and Umbria," by Carl Vrooman; "The Democracy of James Russell Lowell," and a sprightly article by Vance Thompson, familiar to readers of the magazines as novelist and essayist, entitled, "Paris at Play," which is elaborately illustrated from drawings. In fiction the Pilgrim for August is rich. A story by Caroline Lockhart, entitled, "Peelies' Peers," treats with delicious humor of the jury system. "Between Two Worlds," by Curtis Dunham and Oliver Herford, narrs its conclusion, and there is also an installment of Gustav Kobb's charming novelette, "He Stoops to Conquer."

ded interest for the reader who remembers the Century's article on Yellowstone park printed in 1871 and 1872, the first magazine papers to bring the subject prominently before the public. The article will have pictures by Blumenschein.

E. Phillips Oppenheim. E. Phillips Oppenheim's latest and most mature novel, "A Prince of Sinners," has called attention to this clever English writer whose books have been steadily growing in popularity in this country. Mr. Oppenheim had written ten novels previous to "A Prince of Sinners," and what is more to his credit, his work has constantly improved. He has been best known in this country, previous to the publication of "A Prince of Sinners," by "The Great Awakening," "A Millionaire of Yesterday," "The Survivor," and "The Traitors." In each of these ingenious novels his skill as a story-teller was evident. But in "A Prince of Sinners" Mr. Oppenheim was most fortunate. He really got ahead of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain in attempting to show, through the vehicle of fiction, that the salvation of the English workingman is dependent upon the restoration of a protective tariff in his country. Yet in this new book the tariff discussion plays but a small part, the real story being the eventual career and love affairs of Kingston Brooks, the manly hero, and his relations with Lord Arranmore, the so-called "Prince of Sinners." It is a thoroughly wholesome romance of present-day English social and political life. Mr. Oppenheim, who is 34 years of age, was born and educated in England; was married, in 1892, to Miss Elsie Hopkins of Boston, and at present he resides at Ervington in Leicestershire. He is a member of the Savage and the Authors' clubs, and his favorite sport is golf.

Ten Story Book. The August "10 Story Book" is now on the stands. For summer reading this popular little magazine cannot be excelled. A particularly smart list of writers appears this month, the most conspicuous names being George Ade, Martha McCulloch Williams, H. S. Canfield, William Hamilton Osborne and Edgar Welton Cooley. The stories are all decidedly clever—not a slow one in the issue. These are busy days for George Ade, but nevertheless his story, "Shiner's Diplomacy," proves that he can do more than one thing at a time, and do all things well. It is a thoroughly characteristic conceit. "Outwitting the Major," by Martha McCulloch Williams, has a most ingenious plot, and is in her best vein. Mr. Canfield's "High Courage of Mayne," is startling as a sexual problem. William Hamilton Osborne, one of the new lights of the magazine world, contributes the humorous feature of the number. The selected masterpiece is Guy De Maupassant's "The Mysterious Assassination."—Daily Story Publishing Co., Chicago.

On National Park. To most people Yellowstone park is a region of mystery and magic, and the story of its wonders never grows old. The August Century's account of "A Place of Marvels," another chapter in Ray Stannard Baker's Great Northwest series, has ad-
