

HIDE THEIR MONEY IN THEIR CLOTHING

BUTTE WOMEN FORCE BANKS TO PROVIDE SEPARATE ROOM FOR THEM.

STOCKINGS HIDE A ROLL

Peculiar Scenes Are Frequently Witnessed in the Offices of the Money Changers.

Hosiery departments in the banks! "Yes, this bank has considered the advisability of adding a private room as an accommodation to our women customers," said Alex. Johnston of the Clark bank.

"Frequently women come in here and ask if there is any room to which they can retire for a few minutes. I usually have to send them into the vault.

"In a few minutes they re-appear with a roll of bills as big as my fist. Where the money comes from is, of course, a mystery, as there is none in sight when they disappear.

"There is no doubt but the bank needs a room especially to accommodate women who conceal money in their wearing apparel."

When A. B. Clements of the Aetna bank was seen by the Inter Mountain he was frank in admitting the Aetna had made a mistake in not having allowed for at least a small room for the use of its women customers.

T. M. Hodgins declared the State Savings bank had the plans ready to add an extra room to the bank. So many of the women customers had become addicted to the storing of money in their stockings that a place must be provided to allow them to get at it.

The bank will arrange for this additional room early in the new year. Not only will there be comfortable chairs and stools just the right height to please the women, but plenty of stationary will also be included as requisites.

The room will be large enough to allow of committee meetings, or the meetings of small clubs among the women. There will also be safety deposit boxes with a woman attendant.

One banker stated that since women had entered so largely into business life it had become absolutely necessary to give them special accommodation in the way of small pass books, diminutive check books to be carried in the chateleine; in fact bankers are rapidly recognizing the fact that women are valuable customers.

In regard to the fair sex making a safety deposit box of her hosiery, one story was told of a woman who went into a bank in this city.

She stood before the little square window of the cashier and took several dives into the ample stocking, first bringing forth a package of deeds and deposit slips, then a bag of jewels and lastly a roll of bills as large again as a bologna sausage.

When complete the package was not less than six inches deep.

These she set on the edge of the window with the greatest deliberation, much to the amazement of other customers waiting in line.

RESIGNATION IS CALLED FOR

Old-Time Officeholder of Boise, Idaho, Asked to Quit.

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS. Boise, Idaho, Aug. 28.—J. W. Cunningham, who since 1897 has been at the head of the assay office, has received a letter from Washington calling for his resignation.

The request has caused considerable indignation among republican leaders here. It is charged that the action taken by the department is the outcome of a deal made during the last senatorial contest whereby H. S. Woolley, a prominent Mormon, was promised the position in return for his influence with certain members of the legislature.

Missionary Is Dead. New York, Aug. 28.—Miss Sarah F. Gardner, the missionary, who missed a month ago from India, where she represented the Women's Missionary society for 24 years, is dead in the Catskills, where she had gone to recuperate.

A Misunderstanding. First Stork—You look sad, what's the trouble? Second Stork—Trouble enough; I have an extra child on my hands.

First Stork—How's that? Second Stork—I took around triplets to a family and they refused to take the third child, saying that they had ordered twins.

—New York Sun.

Resentment. "You saw me steal things from the cupboard?" The Esquimaux boy sadly blubbered. "And father chastised me."

"But it most surprised me."

"He didn't whip you 'cause you rupboard."

—Judge.

ODD COURTSHIP DOWN IN MEXICO

WOMEN ARE GUARDED AS CLOSELY AS IN THE MOSLEM COUNTRIES.

YOUNG HEARTS KEPT APART

Wife, in Most Cases, Is In Reality Only a Little Above the Servant.

Inseparably woven in with all things associated with Mexico in the foreign mind is the strain of romance. Nowhere in the world is love more spontaneous, more violent, and what wonder if it be as transient!

Only in Moslem countries are women more secluded than in Mexico. This effort on the part of elders to keep young hearts apart has the effect of making love affairs all the more intense.

One of the prettiest views I have ever had into this inner court of the native life was one of the first. We had been up the hill of Guadalupe and seen the shrine, and were on our way down to the miraculous well by the steps that pass the great stone walls and chanced to admire a little child in the care of its sister, a girl of 15.

Playing With Cup. The child was playing with a tiny cup of native pottery, and insisted that I take it, and while we chatted with them the girl was playing with a poor, cheap locket hung by a bead string around her plump brown neck. She saw that I noticed it, and with the sweetest shyness and an adorable pride showed me the picture it contained—just a brown Indian boy in a new sombrero, and when I had looked at it with question in my eyes she said almost in a whisper: "It is my novio."

"Novio" means lover, and her eyes grew large and luminous with the word. It took but little urging to let her pour out eagerly the whole story. She lived in Santa Maria, one of a family of 14. He dwelt in Tacubaya, and was a burro boy. He had seen her at a fiesta, and she said she loved him as soon as she looked in his face.

She had never seen him since then except once in the street with his burros. The picture he had taken and carried to her with some clipped veras by a tiny "muchacho," a boy so little that no one would suspect him of being a love messenger. Just then a woman, bearing a jar of blessed water from the well approached, and the girl hid the locket. It was her mother and she was afraid.

Much to Be Said. There is much said of the picturesque peasantry of Europe, but I doubt if any one country of them all can afford the great variety of dress found among the women of Mexico, and there is none of the many dresses but seems to add to the beauty of the wearer. This beauty is not for long, for they mature early and begin to fade when a woman of the United States would be considered in her prime.

In Yucatan the "mestizo" girls are many of them distinctly handsome, and there are few among the daughters of very wealthy families to excel in looks girls who are to be seen at labor about the streets of Merida, Ismal and Motul.

These girls are always barefooted, except when wearing pretty two-strapped sandals, and no matter at what tasks they may be engaged they are clad in spotless white dresses, on the bottom widths of which is the most elaborate and often highly colored embroidery.

Their features are a mixture of the delicate Spanish and the heavier Maya, and since there has been for generations the greatest care in the habit of inter-marrying with other classes, the type has become purified.

Freedom of Women.

There is greater freedom for women of the Indian and "mestizo" class in Yucatan than there is for the Yucatecos, for they are seldom ever allowed to go in public on foot at all, and then are always accompanied by a duenna or some male relative. In the evening they have their outing in the family carriage, which drives in the procession round and round the plaza and some of the principal streets.

One day as I was walking along a side street in the best residence portion of Merida I saw a bit of paper dangling from the end of a string that led up over a balcony and into a window, the shutter of which was almost entirely closed, only a bare crack being visible. The string jerked just the least bit, causing the paper to bob up and down.

I turned as if to cross the street for closer inspection. Instantly the paper, which I was convinced was a note, was drawn up and I retired to the next corner, where I paused a few moments out of sheer curiosity to see what would happen. The note was lowered again, and soon there came sauntering by a handsome young man in "charro" costume, something unusual in the state. As he passed under the balcony, he whipped out a knife, severed the string, put the note in his hat and sauntered on.

Among the Indians. Some of the most beautiful women of Mexico are to be found among the Indians of the Tehuantepec isthmus. There on Sundays one will see hundreds of pretty church-goers wearing a most extraordinary costume. The skirt is often of satin or silk, heavily lace trimmed sometimes, and with a short sleeved waist. The headpiece is the principal feature. It is a great, stiff laundered accordion pleated sort of thing that can look very pretty and can be what the woman's word "sloppy" means.

The Amatecas, both men and women, wear white cotton garments on which the embroidery is done in panels, either down the front of the woman's skirt or on the tunic the men wear.

There is a curious custom among them of lovers exchanging the twigs of certain trees in entire secrecy, except as each new twig is received it is carried to the father or mother or guardian of each of the two and assent is given for the continuance of the exchange till orange blossoms are reached; then it is time for the priest.

This pretty method of courtship is dying out, as it is a relic of Indian customs and is discouraged by the priests.

Always the Same. In nearly all parts of the country the lover's process is the same. It is called "playing bear," and is of Spanish extraction. Of course, it is not necessary to play bear in those classes where the young folks are thrown together in the market, the field, the workroom and the highway, but even there a close watch is kept on the girls, and conversation with their adorers is fragmentary.

The beginning of a courtship is usually the sight of each other on some public day, some "fiesta," or when driving in the Paseo. The lover-to-be beholds a face that catches his heart to tighten, then expand, and though she may have but glanced at him, if he does not know who she is, he will follow and ascertain her abode.

That night there will be twanging guitars without her window, and he may attempt to sing (few Mexicans but have fair voices).

The next day burning epistles of deathless love arrive, and possibly an elder member of the young man's family, and if their respective stations, fortunes and all other things are suitable, the young people begin to see each other, with some third person ever present and between them, except in those fond moments when she stands at her window or balcony and her lover is without, but near enough that the slightest whisper of one can be heard by the other; and if the bars are wide lips may meet.

Making of Love. So love is made, until the wedding day; but, sad to relate, when that day is not long passed the young wife takes a place in the household but little higher than the servants. But she has expected nothing else, but dutifully follows her husband to the door each day and kisses his hand as he extends it. Not often does she think a disloyal thought, for she knows if she should but dally with some old lover or chance newly smitten one, her husband will kill her as certain as her lives, and perhaps in the duel with knives that may follow the man will kill her husband. This has happened more than once.—Kansas City Star.

HAS ALL KINDS OF TROUBLE

Eccentric Frenchman Who Calls Himself Emperor Finds Trouble.

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS. Paris, Aug. 28.—Jacques Le Baudy, one of the wealthiest young men in France, is of an original turn of mind. He has invented an automobile and also a successful flying machine.

Last June he organized an expedition which landed on the coast of Morocco between Cape Jubi and said the territory was not fully occupied by a recognized power.

He issued a circular proclaiming himself "Emperor Jacques the First."

He had a scheme for the construction of a railroad across the Sahara and had fixed on a place called Troya as his future capital.

This adventure caused some commotion in political circles in Great Britain and Spain.

The self-styled emperor, however, had some difficulty with the governor of Cape Jubi and had to leave his new dominions in a hurry, leaving behind five men.

His yacht was seized by the Spanish authorities at Las Palmas, and suits for damages have also been filed against him by members of his expedition.
