

THE ANNUAL ENCAMPMENT

The Montana National Guard Enjoy Their Week of Outing at Old Fort Ellis.

What They Had to Eat, the Discipline, and How the Boys Enjoyed Themselves.

Bozeman Treats the Soldier Boys in a Distinguished Manner—Incidents of the Camp.

The soldier boys are home from the encampment, and they are glad of it. Not because they didn't have a good time, but because they need rest.

The first company to arrive on the ground was Captain Ellings of Virginia City. They marched overland, camping out one night.

The second company at the fort was Troop A, cavalry of Helena, which also went overland, making the distance, 150 miles, in three days.

The Virginia City company went in wagons. At 7 o'clock Monday morning all were on land, the salutes were fired.

Adjutant General S. R. Douglas, Quartermaster Huffman, Commissary General Chas. S. Warren and all the staff officers were present, including Col. Curtis.

The encampment was conducted in true military style. Each company was provided with their own cooks, and rations which were plentiful and wholesome.

The boys relished their food and for the first three days it was hard to fill them. Having to digest restaurant food, as was done in Helena last year, they were quick to see the difference.

The order of the day was: Reveille 6 a. m.; breakfast and stables, 7 to 9; mounting, 9 to 10; company drill, 10 to 11; dinner at noon.

The guard duty was excellently conducted under the instruction of Lieutenant Drennan, of Bozeman troop B. There were not over three men in the guard house during the encampment.

Those who were in the "sweat box" once did not get there a second time. The regiment band, Emmet Guard, of Butte, furnished the music.

The first regiment was completely outfitted with new belts, cartridge boxes and bayonet scabbards, and fully equipped according to the United States regulations.

On Friday Governor White arrived and in the afternoon reviewed and inspected all the troops. The governor remained two days. A grand banquet was held at the staff headquarters Friday, at which all the officers of the camp participated.

During the same day the people of Bozeman sent down a special train to Camp White, which is three miles from town, and brought nearly the entire army to the city, the cavalrymen going mounted.

The targets and shooting grounds were not overlooked by the Bozemanites. Some good scores were made, 22 out of 25 being frequently made at 100 yards, and this with the weather was pleasant during the week; very little sickness and few cases of drunkenness were reported.

An election was held Saturday, when regimental officers of the first regiment were chosen for the year as follows: Colonel—C. F. Lloyd, of Butte.

Lieutenant-Colonel—Harry C. Kessler, of Butte. Major—E. A. Kenney, of Missoula.

Surgeon—Dr. Pickman, of Dillon. Asst. Surgeon—F. B. Musser, of Deer Lodge.

MISDEEDS OF EVIL DOERS.

Judge Sanders Presides at the Usual Monday Morning Matinee and Dispenses Justice.

A Woman Who Wanted Her Husband Run Out of Town Relents and Makes Up.

A Servitor With More Brass Than Sense Goes to Jail for Swindling an Honest Granger.

Judge Sanders had a busy day in the police court yesterday. After disposing of a few drunks and disorderlies, a woman with a babe in arms appeared.

In fact, she had reached that stage with her when it became unendurable, but she would withdraw the charge if the court would order her spouse to leave her and leave the city.

The woman was Mrs. Miller and her husband, John Anthony Miller, who faced his honor, meek and humbly and who looked anything but a bad man.

Next a divine looking woman who might readily be mistaken for a gypsy stepped inside the railing and said she wanted to prefer a charge of larceny against one Ellis Walters, who, she claims, relieved her of about $45.

A charge of petty larceny was entered and a warrant issued for the arrest of the alleged thief. The case will be heard to-day.

L. E. Knapp had a grievance. Knapp is a farmer residing at Crow Creek, in Gallatin county. He came to town Saturday night to "see the elephant."

Of course the Coliseum was visited. The stranger sat in the auditorium until 12 o'clock and then got up to leave. As he neared the door a powder bedizen beauty said: "Won't you buy me a glass of beer?"

Mr. Knapp is not a drinking man; in fact, he says he never drank anything intoxicating in his life, but under the seductive pleadings of his fair companion he did consent to buy a drink.

He started for the bar, but the girl, who was Annie Bishop, wouldn't have it that way; she would rather sip the amber beverage in a box and to a box they went.

Just about this time another girl joined them and as the waiter responded to the rapping on the door, girl No. 2, who was Gertrude Powell, said: "Bottle of wine in three, and pull the cork."

The waiter, who was a young man about 21 years of age, tripped away and soon returned with the sparkling champagne and poured it in the glasses.

"But I did not order any wine," said the rascal. "Well, I don't care what you ordered, see," he said, "and you've got to pay for it, see, and you don't get out of here until you do, see, so just dig up, see."

This trade was quickly hurried at the old man, who was caught by the collar by the young man as he got up, and forced back into his seat.

"The cork is pulled, see," continued the waiter, "and I got to have the money, see." Neither man had any trouble. Knapp told one of the girls, who already had some of his money in her hand, to pay the money for the wine.

It was sixteen two-bit pieces. The waiter then left but soon returned and told the old man he only gave him four dollars. The rancher said that was all he had, but Mr. Waiter would not "stand his work."

After more wrangling Knapp pulled a five-dollar bill out of his pocket and gave it to the waiter, who in return, dropped four quarters into the old man's hand and then disappeared out the door.

Seeing that he was three dollars short the girl told him the boy would soon return with the change, but he did not. Leaving the box he asked the boy for his $5, but the fellow insisted that he paid him back in full.

The result was that the old man had the waiter J. F. Whitney, arrested. At the trial yesterday the facts as stated were elicited and testified to by the witness. Whitney was fined $25 and costs, amounting in all to $46, in default of which he went to jail. Another man complained the same evening that this boy bent him out of $5 in making change.
