

POLITICS IN EARLY DAYS.

How Marshal George W. Irvin Introduced John Henry Smith into Public Life.

The Soap Gulch Delegation and How It Was Secured for a Convention.

Tom McGovern's Experience With a Linn-Duster Delegation in Packing a Committee.

Tallyrand was called a politician and he doubtless was more or less familiar with the art of politics in the days when a sign of disapproval was worth a man's life. But if the contest had ever come down to the manipulation of votes in a French caucus it is quite probable that the famous moulder of bon mots would have found himself without resources.

JOHN HENRY SMITH.

How George Irvin Nominated a Myth Who Was Elected "by a Large Majority."

The best story of all is told by United States Marshal George W. Irvin. The marshal has seen as much of politics as any one in the state, and any story he tells about early day political methods discloses many humorous and interesting features.

Where can I find everything I want for baby? Fowler's Cash Store. Who keeps the best assortment of notions and fancy goods? Fowler's Cash Store.

THEY KEPT THE DUSTERS.

A Convention in Which Tom McGovern Showed Fine Work.

The marshal tells another good story of Soap Gulch politics. It was in the days when Tom McGovern had a good deal to say about democratic politics. He was at that time a saloon keeper, a position that gave him a good deal of social prominence in the community.

THE SOAP GULCH DELEGATES.

How They Were Won and Lost by a Game of Seven-Up.

High McQuid tells a good story of the soap-and-salt style of early-day political methods. It was the custom to apportion many delegates to each camp of miners the absence of a system of precincts.
