

THE DRESS FOR VACATION.

Now is Come the Season for the Wearing of Flannel and Serga.

The Shirt Waist and Its Annual List of Complications and Vagaries.

The Croquet Gown and, to Lead Variety for Spice, a Little of the Current Millinery.

[Special Correspondence of THE INDEPENDENT.]

NEW YORK, MAY 20.—THE SUMMER begins so much earlier than it used, not for the astronomer nor the farmer, nor the roosebaab, but for the woman, that the serge and the striped flannels and summer flannels are already in mid-process of making.

The woman who is considering a vacation dress can hardly do better than give some attention to a very simple and thoroughly pretty model I saw this morning. It was a striped flannel of a soft indefinite fawn color, marked with dark blue.

There was a black and ruffled looking vest that came slancing into port from New York this morning with three or four salt-water-loving society girls on board who are off with chaperons, and, of necessity, a certain amount of masculine society, for a longish early summer cruise.

There was a black and ruffled looking vest that came slancing into port from New York this morning with three or four salt-water-loving society girls on board who are off with chaperons, and, of necessity, a certain amount of masculine society, for a longish early summer cruise.

The most usual girl of the party, that is, the girl who under ordinary circumstances would be least likely to depart very readily from customary or traditional ways, had a serge frock whose color was like the blue of the sea, which is now blue and now gray and oftentimes of all, perhaps, streaked and washed with gray and blue. It was made with a plain narrow skirt simply trimmed with black braid and worn with a black silk blouse under a serge blazer turned back with deep or heavy ribbed silk shifting from gray to blue. Her hat was a gray straw sailor with heavy blue ribbon band.

The youngest girl, who holds strongly to the theory that nine women out of ten look best in light colors, chose a white vest, without the blue band which she had used to adorn such suits last season, and with a blouse of the same stuff, belted with a broad girde of pinkish fasted back and front and faced together, and tucked warmly away under a traditional flannel Eton jacket with square fronts and a boyish temperament and constitution.

The most striking and the smartest, but not to all tastes the prettiest, frock of the trio was a strange combination of navy blue flannel with a pale whitish, water green, and with a blouse of the same stuff, belted with a broad girde of pinkish fasted back and front and faced together, and tucked warmly away under a traditional flannel Eton jacket with square fronts and a boyish temperament and constitution.

The girl who wears a blouse this summer often complicates it somewhat with ribbon straps over the shoulder. Sometimes she fixes them brocade-wise, and sometimes she crosses them back and front. Sometimes she starts them at a point at the waist in front, under a silver brooch, and lets them fetch up, or down, at a point in the waist behind. Whatever their arrangement they are quite as apt to contrast in color with the blouse as to agree with it, and to make a pinpoint, sometimes a startling bit of decoration. Wise girls consider the effect of black velvet ribbon before they experiment with anything less safe and sure.

It is not possible to work one's self up to any high pitch of enthusiasm about a shirt waist, which is with us as regularly as apple blossoms or the spring mosquito, because it has so much starch in it and is, accordingly, so indefensible aesthetically. It may be said, indeed, that this summer it is more open to criticism than usual, because it has made a not very intelligent effort to rid itself of some part of its starchiness and only succeeded in taking on lace and frills where frills and lace were never meant to go.

Flowered lawns and percales are the favored shirt waist materials, and the lawn are the prettiest and the percales make the smaller drain upon the sympathies on account of their sufferings in the starching. There are stiff linen shirts with a wide-ness of five inches in front, and the young woman who is desirous of finding a shirt to wear with her creamy brown flannel tennis rig and a pale blue one to go with her dark blue flannel, and an extra shirt to go with dark red—what at least is the combination. I noticed, with the crack player of a oquet party this morning—and every one of the vari-colored waists will have a lace fall and embroidery enough to have put out several pairs of eyes.

For coolness and prettiness, and, yes, if you buy right, for durability, give me the silk shirt—this always is an easy alternative—no shirt at all.

It deserves to be said that the stiff, diamond-shaped cuff is the shirt waist's chief torture, quite outgearing the collar, which this season has, in a majority of cases, made a virtue of necessity and agreed peaceably to lie down. A big chiffon or soft silk scarf at the throat has displaced the masculine four-in-hand of last season, and contrasts oddly enough with the studs, and the stiffness and general style.

The croquet gown is something that now has to be reckoned with. Perhaps it is that tennis must expect to lose all but its real devotees now that it has lost its novelty; perhaps it is that croquet is easy, and perhaps it is that croquet is a nice lady game to play when it is hot; the fact must be acknowledged that more croquet grounds are being laid out on the Newport lawns than society has seen in at least a dozen seasons.

The croquet gown is not like a tennis frock; it is longer. It is not like a garden party gown; it is shorter. It steers its course very cleverly between fashion of the dress in which one is to look pretty and do much and the fashion of the other dress in which one is to look pretty and do nothing at all. It is, in fact, the apotheosis of the gown in which one is to look pretty and do a very little occasionally.

At Newport, on Wednesday, I remember a very striking oquet frock of a changeable taffeta, glistening from a pale rose pink to a paler oswalp yellow. It was worn by the only woman I have seen in three months with a complexion clear enough to put it on in broad daylight out of doors. The stuff was well striped as well as changeable, and something clear blue came out, definitely but not too obtrusively, in the stripings. Pink ribbon laces caught the folds of the dress, and the fashion of the other dress in which one is to look pretty and do nothing at all. It is, in fact, the apotheosis of the gown in which one is to look pretty and do a very little occasionally.

There were some pretty hats at the horse show, and the last theater parties of the spring have brought out a goodly company. A topper, which made itself a good deal of both by obstructing my view, had what poor frightened Paris is tremendously calling a "bomb-shaped" crown of a delicate green straw, with a second bomb, very small and of a darker green, on top. The bombs were sewed, so to speak, on a platter brim of the darker color, and had pink carnations and pink velvet strings for trimmings.

The oddest hats are those in striped and plaid and check and stripes. Some minute brocade with their elaborate figurings. These are prettiest in the least costly varieties, because as rough and ready they are not obliged to require themselves to be taken too seriously. The evening bonnets are more puffs of rainbow chiffon. A dainty example shows shifting shades like the opal. It is misty, filmy, and it would be cruel to put it through the coarse process of dissection in an effort to tell how the effect is produced. There is chiffon and there is a delicate array of star-like "babies' breath"; there is somewhere a turquoise buckle; there make a bonnet and a very successful one. ELLEN OSBORN.
