

DANA ON JOURNALISM.

The Country's Greatest Editor Discusses the Training of Newspaper Makers.

Abstract of His Recent Lectures on the Subject at Union College.

Doesn't Think Colleges Very Successful in Making Journalists—What Greeley Said on the Subject.

In a lecture delivered at Union college on the education needed in preparation for journalism Charles A. Dana said:

The number of intellectual young men who are looking at this new profession, which for the want of a better name we call the profession of journalism, is very great. I suppose that I receive myself every day, taking one day with another, half a dozen letters from men, many of them college graduates, asking for employment and an opportunity of showing what is in them.

Of course they cannot all get it in the same paper. Now and then one obtains a place, but generally the rule that is observed in all well organized newspaper offices is that the boys who began at the beginning are taken up step by step in accordance with their facilities and their merits.

The boys who begin at the bottom come out at the top. At the same time these boys do not all start out with the best outfit—that is to say, with the best education—and I have known very distinguished authorities who doubted whether high education was of any great use to a journalist.

Horace Greeley told me several times that the real newspaper man was the boy who read newspapers and ate ink. Although I served him for several years and we were very near in our personal relations, I think he always had a little grudge against me because I came up through a college.

What sort of preparation, what sort of preliminary education should a man have who means to devote himself to this business? There are colleges which have lately introduced schools of journalism or departments of journalism where they propose to teach the art of newspaper making, to instruct the student in the methods he should employ and to fit him out so that he can go to a newspaper office and make a newspaper. Well, I will not say that is not useful. But there has been a department of journalism at Cornell university for several years, and I have never found that a student or graduate who had pursued that department there instead of pursuing other studies was of any great avail as a practical worker in the newspaper work that he had been trying to learn.

In fact, it seems to me, if I may be allowed a little criticism, that the colleges generally are rather branching out too much, until they are inclined to take the whole universe into their curriculum and to teach things which do not exactly belong there. Give the young man a first class course of general education, and if I could have my way every young man who is going to be a newspaper man and who is not absolutely rebellious against it should learn Greek and Latin after the good old fashion.

I had rather take a young fellow who knows the Ajax of Sophocles, and who has read Tacitus, and can scan every ode of Horace, I would rather take him to report a prize fight or a spelling match, for instance, than to take one who has never had those advantages. I believe in the colleges, I believe in high education, but I do not believe in scattering your fire before you are in the face of the enemy.

There is no question that accuracy, the faculty of seeing a thing as it is, of knowing for instance that it is 24 and not 23 and saying so—that is one of the first and most precious ends of a good education. Next to that I would put the ability to look for what you don't know and what you want to know. Thirdly, I would put Dr. Walker's great object, being able to tell what you know and to tell it accurately, precisely, without exaggeration, without prejudice, the fact just as it is, whether it be a report of a baseball game, or of a sermon, or of a lecture on electricity, whatever it may be, to get the thing exactly as it is. The man who can do this is a very well educated man.

In addition come the qualities of personal talent and genius. Now genius is a great factor. When we think of such a genius as the one I have just mentioned—the late Mr. Greeley, why, our minds may well be filled with it. I do not suppose more than one or two gentlemen here ever knew Mr. Greeley personally, but he was a man of immense ability, of instincts of extraordinary correctness in many respects, and of the power of expression of telling what he knew in a delightful picturesque, humorous way—which not merely instructed the learner and reader, but gave him a sense of delight and satisfaction from the mere art that was applied in the telling. His hand had no grooves in it, as you know. He had to pick up his education as he went along, reading in the winter evenings by the firelight, and never wasting a chance of learning something.

But he lacked one of the most precious faculties, which is another great object of the college education to cultivate and bring out, and that is what we will call the critical faculty, the judgment which, when a proposition is stated to you or a fact is reported, looks at it calmly and says, "That is true," or else, "That is false." The judgment, the instinct, the developed and cultivated instinct which knows the truth when it is presented and detects error when it comes masquerading before you, without the necessity of any long examination to ascertain whether it is truth or error.

The next thing that I would dwell upon would be the knowledge of politics and especially American politics. This is a very hard subject. Its history is difficult. If you go back to its foundation of the republic, you will find it was extremely complicated even then, and it requires very careful study and a very elevated impartiality to make your analysis at all satisfactory to yourself as you go through the work. Still it is indispensable to a man who means to fill an important place in journalism, and all who begin upon it certainly have that intention.

The First Blackboard. Howells's "Queer Facts and Curious Fancies" says that "the first blackboard was made at London in the year 1706 and was used as a small educational institution near Paddington Green. "H. A. Wood, an authoritative investigator, says: "The first blackboard ever used for the purpose of instruction was made by Colonel Claudius Crozet, one of Napoleon's officers, and afterward teacher of mathematics at West Point. The board was made in 1816." Which is right?—St. Louis Republic.

The Duel Wasn't Fought.

In connection with journalists' responsibilities, M. de Cassagne relates an anecdote he heard from M. de Villemessant, the founder of the Paris Figaro. Insulted daily in a Belgian paper by a writer whose nom de plume was "Marco Spada" (a likely name for a bravo), M. de Villemessant took the train to Brussels with two friends and a pair of swords. On his arrival he wrote to Marco Spada that at 3 p. m. sharp he should call on him to arrange an encounter. On the stroke of 12 M. de Villemessant appeared at the editorial office and asked for "Marco Spada." What was his amusement on seeing an old lady all wrinkled and with curls about the ears appear from behind a small window, and on hearing the reply, "I am Marco Spada, sir, and am at your orders!"—New York Times.

Her Prompter. A Spring Garden street mamma told her 6-year-old daughter that she had two sides to her nature, the right side and the wrong, and cautioned her always to follow the promptings of the right side. "But, mamma," the little one replied, "my heart is not on the right side."—Philadelphia Record.

"Nothing succeeds like success," and nothing will more quickly insure success than true merit. For fifty years Ayer's Sarsaparilla has maintained its popularity as the superior blood purifier. It stands upon its own merits and never fails to give satisfaction.

At an "up to date" wedding in Bowling Green, Mo., recently the bridal cake was made by the groom, and the happy pair were welcomed after the ceremony at the church by the city brass band with the strain of "See, the Conquering Hero Comes."

An English admiral says: "It is true, the life-saving services of America is not equalled anywhere in the world." It is also true that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saves, annually, thousands of lives. Invaluable in sudden colds, throats and lung troubles.

Autograph letters written by 17 presidents of the United States have been presented to the Millicent library of Fairhaven, Mass., by H. H. Rogers, an enthusiastic collector.

Hood's Sarsaparilla cures catarrh by purifying the blood and building up the system. Take it now.
