SELLING PRESSURE CONTINUES

HARRIMAN'S RETURN TO HIS OFFICE ROUTS BEARISH OPERATORS ON MARKET.

New York, Jan. 12.—Selling pressure continued in evidence in stock transactions today, but it was in a spotty and fitful way. E. H. Harriman appeared at his office for the first time since before Christmas holidays and thereby put an end to the occupation of the bearish operators who had been disseminating rumors of his serious illness in efforts to depress prices. With these changes, which had been aggravating the weakness in stocks, the bear element took on a share of caution and increased reserve in the way in which they pushed operations. The result was seen in the decrease in the activity of the market and the disposition to take stocks at concessions to cover shorts. The buying was not aggressive and did not pursue an advance in prices, as seen in the dwindling activity of the market on rallies and the subsequent relapse in prices at last. Minor stocks continued to rise with repetition of rumors of favorable developments. The Wisconsin Central stocks, especially, were affected by reports of alleged negotiations for absorption by the Canadian Pacific. The total value of the monthly exports rises to the highest figure touched since the preceding January, which marked the culmination of the panic rush to market our products and realize the gold to relieve the financial stringency. A decline in the private discount rate in Paris gave some evidence of an effect from the large gold accumulation in the Bank of France, which is expected to terminate with the issuance of the Russian loan on January 22. Discount continued to advance in London, however, and the expectation is unchanged that the official discount rate of the Bank of England will be advanced on Thursday.

Bonds were irregular. Total sales, par value, $5,022,000.

United States bonds were unchanged on call.

STUPENDOUS TASK FOR JEFFRIES

TRAINING FOR FIGHT MEANS LONG AND ARDUOUS WORK FOR EX-CHAMPION.

After many protests against re-entering the prize ring, Jim Jeffries, former heavyweight champion of the fist game, has decided to attempt the ordeal of getting into condition to meet Champion Jack Johnson in an effort to wrest the honors from the big black.

Jeffries, who has been operating an athletic arena in Los Angeles for over a year, has closed his business and is reported to be turning his attention to a course of light training for the coming bout with Johnson, a purse of $100,000 having been offered for the fight, to take place in a Nevada mining camp.

Whether or not the Californian can ever get into condition for a bruising contest is a question which no one is going to decide in an off-hand manner. The big fellow has been out of the game for five years now, and all the training he has done in that time has been the mere pushing of loaded "schooners" over a mahogany bar. At present Jim Jeffries weighs in the neighborhood of 300 pounds against a fighting weight of 210, and it surely will be a big task to reduce to anywhere near a reasonable weight, and not feel the effects of the hardship. Whoever heard of a pugilist remaining out of the game five years and coming back strong? Jeffries may be an exception to the general rule, but his living in the past five years does not warrant any betting in his favor. In fact, the big fellow himself refuses to make a positive statement that he will meet Johnson. From this it would seem that "Jeff" intends to take up a light training and see what effect it will have on his superfluous adipose tissue. Should the result be favorable there is a possibility that the ex-champion will meet Johnson, but the chances are not all in favor of such an outcome.

From the present outlook it is 10 to 1 shot that Jeffries will never meet Johnson, and that the black man will hold the title for some time to come.

"CAP" ANSON LOOKING FOR MANAGER'S BERTH

Once the king of all ball players and still retaining a strong hold on the lovers of the national game, "Cap" Adrian C. Anson of Chicago again seeks to enter the game in the capacity of manager and is casting about for a berth with a minor league team.

Anson led the Chicago National team for many years and holds the distinction of having batted over .300 per cent for a matter of 15 years, a feat which has not been equaled by any player. He started his baseball career with the National league in 1876 and he kept his eye on the ball and a firm grip on his big bat for 15 consecutive seasons and retired only because of approaching age and the villainous methods employed by James A. Hart, president of the Chicago club.

Although gray headed, Cap Anson still has that in his organism which would make him the successful leader of a class "A" club.

Fred Beulow, the old Cleveland catcher, goes to Montreal next season.

SKI JUMPER LOSES STORY OF RAH-RAH BY ACCIDENT

ATHLETE COVERING 106 FEET TURNS SKI AND LOSES TO 102-FOOT RECORD.

St. Paul, Jan. 12.—After skimming lightly through the air for the unusual distance of 106 feet, Ole Feiring was cheated of his chance for a victory over Evensen, 1908's champion ski jumper, by the accidental turning of one of his skis in alighting which threw him headlong and disqualified his remarkable jump. John Evensen takes the first place in the closing events of the tourney of the Twin City Ski club, with a record of a perfect jump of 102 feet.

The delightful winter weather, crisp and moderate, without wind, brought out an immense crowd for the meet. The Haugan brothers of Chippewa Falls, Wis., took second and third places, with jumps of 101 and 100 feet respectively. Ole Manserth, a famous northwestern expert, had his luck and finished fifth, with 95 feet.

The jumpers made their start from a new steel tower with a suspended slide hung from steel cables which augmented the steepness and length of the hill used in former years. Perched high in the air for the start, the jumpers looked hardly larger than birds, and once started took the slide at a terrific pace, which increased with each fraction of a second until the "jump" at the bottom was reached, from the edge of which the minimum distance to the landing was 50 feet. Feiring's failure to alight standing cost him 30 points, and the difficulty of negotiating a successful descent after taking the jump penalized dozens of men. Experts figure the speed of the men at the instant of making the jump at fully a mile a minute.

Another tourney is to be held in two weeks, which, with slightly colder weather and dryer snow, is expected to develop some of the greatest jumps ever made in the United States. The new course is pronounced perfect, there being just sufficient moisture in the snow to make it stick slightly on the blades of the skis, thus handicapping the jumpers for speed to some extent. Evensen declares he can make 120 feet on the new course under perfect snow conditions.

SENSATIONAL ACCIDENT AT FOOTBALL GAME BRINGS FAME WITH NO TROUBLE.

If one wishes to write a rah, rah, and foremost thing is to know nothing about college or, if one knows anything at all, forget it. This rule applies with equal force to almost any other kind of a short story. Having forgotten per specifications everything that might apply to the subject, one may choose one or two kinds of college stories, either the stunt story which shows what perfect or imperfect little limbs the college boys are, or the football story.

If one picks the stunt story as the field of one's endeavors then one must engage in such exuberantly funny stunts as hanging a freshman by his heels from a rapidly moving auto or dropping a fruit box constructor down the neck of the dignified prexy. The trouble with this kind of a story, however, is that the field has already been too well covered. The short story writers have depicted their college boys committing almost every species of robbery, arson, mayhem and cold-blooded murder. To escape the charge of plagiarism one should choose the football story.

The scene of the football story, of course, should be laid at Yale. Other colleges may have good football teams and Yale has been known to have poor ones, but never in the magazine short stories.

Having fixed upon the background, one should pick out a football star for the hero, a fair, exceedingly fair maiden for the heroine, and a deep-dyed villain, who doesn't explain why he is deep-dyed and who, of course, must be thwarted or rather "baffled." It is essential that the plot of the story be worked out in such a way that the hero must win the crucial football game in order to get the girl, and naturally the D. Ded villain tries to throw the game by treachery of the worst kind.

One may start like this: "Twelve, thirteen, twenty-three, skiddoo," the excited little quarterback cried, and Dick Blake, the giant half, knew that now or never must be in for his dear old alma mater, for this was his signal for a buck around the end. Of course one need not learn football phraseology; "a buck around the end" will answer the purpose as well as the proper terminology.

"Dick darted out from his place in the line and grabbed the ball from the center, sure as a back, scurried like a frightened rabbit, dodging here and there as he threaded his way through the opposing line. Above him in the crowded stands the tens of thousands of spectators roared: "Break up de ax, de ax, de ax. "Break up de ax, de ax, de ax. "Boola, boola, Yale, Yale, Yale!"

"Dick, aroused by the famous war cry of his classmates, struggled along on his way to the distant goal."

Now the distant goal should be anywhere from 50 yards to perhaps 90 away, but Dick should struggle through 2,000 yards before reaching it and making "the greatest run ever made by any player on any field." Each step of the field should be described and his thoughts throughout the "interminable journey." Ninety yards may not seem interminable at first glance, but they will seem so to the reader, who, waiting through the story, so that the term may not be incongruous.

The description of the greatest run ever made should run, or rather limp, somewhat like this: "Bang, Dick smashed into the Harvard end," which was almost the end of Dick, but it wasn't. "O, pshaw," groaned Dick. "Only a three-yard gain, but he struggled gamely on"—200 words—"Smash, and the flooring halfback crashed into the giant quarterback that disrupted his way. Thank my lucky stars," Dick muttered. "At least I've gained four yards." Still with grim determination he wrenched loose and continued his flight toward the goal line."

—250 words—"Bing, the tall, ungainly Harvard center tried to stop the fierce rush of the halfback. 'Gosh sakes,' moaned Dick, 'only five yards gain.'" —300 words.

Usually the Harvard football team consists of 11 men, and by the time Dick reaches the 10-yard line he has dodged 37 of these, but there his flight is arrested, for although he can dodge the best man Harvard ever turned out, he can't dodge the author.

"Now there was but one man ahead of him, the fullback, who was playing near the goal to stop just such a run as this. 'Eighty yards from the line,' Dick knew that he must dodge this one man, who waited grim and silent as death itself. But Dick feared not. At his side he could hear the deep breathing of one of his teammates, and he depended upon this man to smother the waiting tackler."

"Dick rushed on, the Harvard man crouching for a spring and then—then was perpetrated one of the most dastardly deeds ever seen on a football field."

That was the dastardly deed? While Dick is stopping midway in his flight on the way to the goal we will find out.

Here the budding author must get busy on the real plot of the story. Dick, the reader is told, was in love with the fair, the exceedingly fair, maiden; so was Harold Winterby, the Yale quarterback and captain of the team.

But the fair maiden had a father, strange as it may seem, and inconvenient as it turns out to be. Said father with the lack of foresight so often seen in the paternal parents of the fair heroines in stories, had invested all his money in Wall street and on a margin. To hold that margin he needed some spare change, but he didn't have it. Neither did Dick, said to relate, but he had hocked his dress suit and his auto and his chemistry books to bet on the great game, and if Yale won the great game he would win the spare change and the father could make good on the margin and the girl would love him for himself alone—and for the spare change—and the deep-dyed villain would go back to the "tal and uncut."

But the D. D. V. had other plans. If Yale should lose, then Dick would lose; also papa, and of course then the girl would love the deep-dyed villain—for himself alone, O, no—but she would love to marry him anyway.

So to get back to the game where Dick is waiting on the 10-yard line and the Harvard man is still flying through the air on his dive tackle, Harold, who was the teammate beside Dick, doesn't block the Harvard back, but he allows him to fall upon the Yale halfback, who has shaken off everyone else, but can't give this man the shake, and while Dick is down Harold impudently kicks him in the slats, thus breaking three ribs and apparently putting an end to Dick's football career.

Then, of course, the budding author may use some 400 words in describing the unpleasant sensation of getting kicked in the slats and Dick's terrible matter for "factly" Dick struck to his feet," the rest of the Harvard men meanwhile standing aside and allowing him to do so.

"With one supreme effort, more dead than alive, Dick managed to break loose from the Harvard back. Falling, swerving like a man in a dream, he stumbled onward toward the goal line. Dead to all sensation, all thought except that he must reach the white-washed line, he groped his way along," pursued by the considerate rivals.

"At length, with one long gasp, he fell across the line, then everything became black." And they carried Dick away to the hospital? Not at all. The girl climbed down from the seat in the stand, vaulted over the six-foot barb wire fence that separates the Yale seats from the field, dodged the crowd, danced the Omega Lambda Chi dance, and hunted up the fallen hero, who should have been carried off long ago to have some of the broken slats mended.

"Dick," she murmured, while some 30,000 people were yelling at the top of their voices all around her. "Dick, my hero."

And that is the neat touch that ends the story.—By Horace Zollars.

MANAGERS AND DIAMOND STARS FAIL TO AGREE

Here is a list of the stars of the diamond who have announced definitely, positively, unequivocally, finally and lastly that they will not play next year unless their terms are met.

Here is the one player who has declared positively that he will play baseball if he has to break down a fence and fight police reserve to get on the diamond: Joe Tinker, Chicago Cubs.

Mike Kelly will manage the St. Paul team and Tim Flood will be the captain. That combination is enough to start something on any ball field in the American association.
