

SOCIETY

The call of spring is in the air and already enthusiastic plans are being made for fishing and picnic parties, and a few especially strenuous ones have their rallying parties for the summer made up of the choicest of spots chosen in which to pitch their tents and even some of their favorite paraphernalia packed. The majority are content to indulge in day excursions, however, of the good things which the future holds in store, and the knowledge that a few days' preparation will find them equally well equipped. Not all of the excursions are in the distance, though, for dances, dinners, card parties, etc., all held their own, secure in the fact that there are many who always prefer the more formal social affairs. Mysterious whispers of home-gings, the various merits of the home or church, for such auspicious occasions, of trousseau and of honeymoon, are numerous and most interesting but up to the present most indefinite, but probably the interest and curiosity aroused will soon be satisfied and then the usual delectable social functions attendant on such announcements will begin.

A lady from St. Paul writes in substance, as follows:
"When I began using Danderine my hair would not come to my shoulders and now it is as long as my life."
Another from Newark, N. J., writes:
