

Sacrifices All for Divorce

MRS. CATHERINE CLOW.

Chicago, Sept. 4.—The story of a woman's sacrifice of her pride and honor that her husband might have grounds for divorce proceedings was told yesterday by Mrs. Catherine Clow, wife of L. E. Clow, a contractor, living in Wilmette, after her arrest in company with a friend at a North Clark street hotel.

Sobbing like a child in the realization of the price she had paid for freedom from her husband, the woman prepared to try to retrieve her honor and establish the standing of her home for the sake of two sons, just old enough to realize the position of their mother, which she declares is a false one.

Mrs. Clow was arrested early yesterday morning in a hotel at 112 North Clark street in company with A. R. Triplett, a young musician just out of his teens and a friend of her son, Myndret Clow. Warrants charging each with a serious offense were sworn by the husband, and the two were taken to the county jail to await a hearing.

"It was all deliberately planned under the advice of my attorney and with the knowledge of my children, and I went to the hotel expecting to be arrested," said Mrs. Clow last night. "I had never realized as I do how terrible is the price I am paying for my freedom. I would have never allowed me to ruin myself in this way."

"My husband and I could not agree, and we were each willing to get a divorce, but neither had grounds. I had talked it over with my son Myndret, but we could not find any excuse for taking action. I consulted a lawyer, and he said that the only way that I could expect an immediate divorce was to do something that would arouse the anger of my husband."

"He said that if I would allow myself to be caught in a hotel with another man my husband would be furious and have ample reason for asking a divorce. I shuddered when I thought of this, but my son thought that it could be done without any publicity, and after a quarrel with my husband last week I decided to act. I will be paying the penalty of that folly as long as I live."

"Last week my husband discharged the cook and gave no reason for his action. I went into the kitchen and would have prepared breakfast for him and the boys. But when he had finished his cereal he rang the buzzer as though I were the servant. I did not answer, and he continued to ring. This angered me, and I went in and unbraided him for treating me as a servant. Then he said that I was worse than a servant and not fit to wait table. He swore and threw things as he left the house."

"Mr. Triplett tried to dissuade me from taking so wild a step, as I proposed, but I was foolish enough to think that it would be easy to escape publicity and be sure of a divorce. He finally agreed to aid me and take the consequences. Now the poor fellow is down in that cell, disgraced as I am."

"Mr. Clow refuses to be convinced that the trip to the hotel was a part of the plan for a divorce, and said he would prosecute both his wife and Triplett. He filed a bill for divorce last yesterday afternoon, and summons for her appearance in court Monday was served on Mrs. Clow yesterday."

"I have been suspicious of my wife for some time, and have been trying to prove my suspicions," he said. "I have used Triplett well and cannot forgive this act of his which has ruined my home."

Young Myndret spent the day trying to reconcile his parents, but gave up the attempt last night.

"Life at our house has been awful lately," he said. "Father and mother quarrel continually, and it was hard to be friends with both of them. Mother and I have talked the matter over, and she would have asked for a divorce long ago, but there were no grounds."

"This story attacking the honor of my mother is also false, Triplett is a young fellow who was in the same troupe with me. When we were playing at a Chicago house he met my parents, and I took him to our summer home in Michigan, where he spent some time with me."

"He was a fine fellow and mother called him her boy the same as she would a kid. When she proposed that he go to a hotel with her and give father grounds to make charges against her I fought it because I was afraid that the story would get out and ruin her. It all came out as I feared."

Society circles in which Mrs. Clow moved were in a future of excitement yesterday when the arrest became public. The story was so complete a surprise to friends of the family that few would discuss it.

W. A. Radcliffe, president of the Republic Manufacturing company, for years a friend of the family, hearing of the arrest of Mrs. Clow late last night, hurried to the county jail and offered bond for her release, but failed to find a judge to sign the release, and she remained in jail all night.
