Thomas A. Marlow, president of the National Bank of Montana, was in town yesterday on his way back to Helena from a business visit to the Bitter Root. Mr. Marlow spent the time he was in Missoula in a tour of the city, and when he had looked it over he was frank in his expressions of admiration of the development that has taken place here. Speaking to a Missoulian reporter, Mr. Marlow said: "I was here a little more than a year ago and I thought then that you were growing fast, but I had no idea that a year from that time would work so great a change as has taken place. Missoula is growing fast and is growing well; your improvements are substantial and your new buildings would be a credit to any city. I have seen most of the cities of Montana this season—all of the principal ones—and there is not one of them that has made the improvement and the permanent gain that Missoula has. I thought Billings had grown wonderfully, and it has, but it has made no such showing as Missoula makes. You are to be congratulated upon the decided gain you have made. You are certainly realizing the expectations of those who have had confidence in the city. The progress that is evidenced in the building that is going on is sufficient to convince any observer of the permanence of your growth."

A THOUSAND PEOPLE HEAR SERMON

"WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?" IS SUBJECT OF DR. H. O. BREEDEN AT HARNOIS.

Last evening's service at the Harnois theater marked the end of the first week of the revival services now being held under the auspices of the Christian church. That these services are meeting with success is evinced by the fact that one thousand people listened to Dr. H. O. Breeden last evening. Three great services marked yesterday: The sermon delivered at the church in the morning was of surpassing beauty and tenderness; that in the afternoon, a talk to men, was heard no change; the night service was the day's climax. The trend of the evangelists' chief sermon of the day was as follows:

"What think ye of Christ? Whose son is He? The twofold question of this text is the crucial, vital, transcendent question of the Christian religion. It is definite and personal. What think you of Christ? Not what your mother, your pastor, the philosopher or the scientist think of Him? Strauss may declare that He remains the highest model of religion within the reach of our thought and Eugen Paul Richter may affirm that 'He is the purest among the mighty and the mightiest among the pure' and Napoleon may exclaim 'I know men and I tell you that Jesus Christ was not a man. Everything in him astonished me and his will confounds me.' And Renan may aver that 'Whatever the surprises of the future, Jesus will never be surpassed. Repose now in thy glory, Noble Founder. Thy work is finished. Thy divinity is established!' It helps not nor does it hinder, what others have thought of Jesus. Only the verdict is interesting. Everything depends on what we think of Him, both here and hereafter; for what we think of Him largely determines character, and character determines destiny. It is significant that Jesus addressed his supreme theme of thought, The question enthrones a person, not a system, a philosophy, an institution. A person who was and is the supreme fact of life, the dominant force of the world.

"But who is Jesus Christ? Whose son is he? We know what He is. He is a force in the world greater than any other. But where shall we go for information concerning Him? Where shall we ascertain His origin, His history and character? We are directed to the New Testament—to four short records called the gospels. We are asked now to believe nothing concerning the inspiration of these histories or the biographers—only that they were faithful historians, writing down what they saw, heard and experienced and what they received from credible witnesses who spoke at first hand. They were faithful witnesses, sealing their testimony with their blood. They were honest historians with exceptional opportunities and facilities for knowing the truth of the things of which they wrote.

"Jesus sustained His claim of deity by three inflexible credentials: By what He said first. 'Never man spake as this man.' This was the testimony of enemies. Yet He wrote no book, invented no tool, discovered no remedy for physical ills, contributed nothing to the sciences. He simply talked. Once He wrote in the sand, but the writing was obliterated by the first gust of wind. He never tried to preserve His wisdom, nor did He ask others to do so; but there is no speech like it. It stands alone. We are not left to report concerning His wisdom. The very words at which men marveled when He uttered them are here in the four gospels, and men read them now and marvel still.

"His second inflexible credential was His supernatural power. He was master of earth, sea and sky. The winds and waves obeyed His call. If we read the simple, artless narrative of the evangelists we see Him in the sweet greatness of His humanity and the world-ruling majesty of His divinity. The human and divine are blended like two stars in conjunction. He is the meeting place of two worlds. The essence of all being centers in Him. In Him godhood and manhood are forever united.

"The third credential of Jesus was the life He lived. He was absolutely sinless. Sin is so characteristically human that sinlessness must be divine. Pollution touched the hem of His garment but left no stain. 'Which of you convinceth Me of sin, was His challenge.'

"The meetings will continue each evening in the Christian church. A great theme will be discussed tonight.

Amongst the Sunday visitors in town was Charlie Flowers, who used to sell shoes to all of us, but who is now one of the big men of the road, selling cases where he used to sell pairs. He received a cordial welcome from his old friends as fast as they knew he was in town, and he had a pleasant reunion before the day was over. He is the same old boy and it was good to meet him again. He was glad to see his friends, too, and the day was a delightful one. "Missoula looks fine," said he. "It's growing so that I don't know how to find my way around, but I meet enough of the old fellows to make me realize that I am at home when I get here. You are certainly going some."

Mrs. Marshall, county superintendent of schools, has prepared an excellent program for the teachers' institute which opens its sessions here today, and has labored earnestly to secure the co-operation of all who would contribute to the success of the meetings. There are several of the local clergymen on the program, most of them to deliver the invocation at the opening of the session in the morning. In securing the presence of the ministers Mrs. Marshall made personal visits and extended her invitation cordially; as a result the acceptances came readily. When she called upon one of the clergymen Mrs. Marshall stated that she had come to ask a favor. The minister very courteously asked her what it was. "I want you to pray for the teachers," said Mrs. Marshall. "I shall be glad to," was the clerical response. And when she came to think it over Mrs. Marshall thought it best to return and state specifically the nature of the supplication which she desired. "The clergyman's response had sounded as if he thought the request was a general one and that the prayer was needed."

C. B. Cooper of the United Wireless Telegraph company, who is in Missoula to install a station, has many interesting stories of the wireless work on the coast. Handling to a Missoulian man a list of the stations on the coast and of the ships that are equipped with wireless apparatus, Mr. Cooper said: "You will be surprised, I suppose, to see such a long list. Most inland people are. We are doing a lot of business on the coast. One of the ships on that list you will have to cross off—that's the Ohio. You have had the story, of course, of poor Eckels; he was a great operator; I hired him for the work and I knew him better than anybody else. He was the best man you would have picked out as a hero; he was a happy-go-lucky fellow, a jolly companion when ashore but strictly business as soon as he was aboard the ship on which he was stationed. I was not surprised when I learned how he behaved; but I knew him, as I say, better than anybody else. When he was at work he knew nothing and thought of nothing but the work he had to do. I grieved for him as I would for a brother."

"No matter how long you work with the wireless," said Mr. Cooper, continuing his talk, "you never get over the mystery of it. Scientists may tell you how it is done, but you can't escape the constant thought that it is the strangest experience you ever had, this talking through the air. I installed the station at Ketchikan, Alaska, which was the station which picked up Eckels' message from the Ohio. We thought we would have a lot of trouble with that station, but when I first tried it it was as clear as a bell. The mountains come down so abruptly around the station that we thought it would be difficult to get good results. As soon as I called when we had the apparatus installed I got San Francisco and talked over the 1,600 miles of space without trouble. Then we picked up the message which the steamer Holleran was sending to San Francisco, giving her position, 98 miles east of Honolulu. That was 2,800 miles from us. And the message was sharp and clear."

"RALLY DAY" PROVES GREAT SUCCESS

METHODIST SUNDAY SCHOOL CELEBRATES ITS ANNUAL FESTIVAL.

Yesterday the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal church celebrated "Rally day" with appropriate exercises. The day was a gratifying success. The attendance had passed the 300 mark before, and with the cry of "400 for Rally day," which had been made the watchword of the Sunday school for a year, the attendance yesterday was pushed up to 432. The whole school took part in the program, which was announced in The Missoulian yesterday morning, and at the close 16 members of the school were received into church membership.

At the morning preaching service the pastor took as his text, "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence and the men of violence take it by force." The sermon was a masterful one, and Mr. Tat urged his hearers not to sit in apathy, but to do things, for, he said, "the church is an army in active service, and with every Christian on the firing line the battle may be easily won."

CENTENARY OFFICIAL VISITS IN MISSOULA

Arthur English, one of the commissioners of the Hudson-Fulton celebration, which will be held in New York during the week beginning September 25, has been spending the past couple of days in Missoula on his way to Seattle. Mr. English is a strong booster for the celebration and is putting in his time in advertising it. He states that the observance of the centenary of the first trip of Robert Fulton's steamboat, the Clermont, is to be a big and joyous one, and hundreds of thousands of visitors are expected in the city during the week. Holland has sent over an exact replica of Hendrick Hudson's "Half Moon," which will be on exhibition during the entertainment.

Mr. English has fallen in love with Missoula, and, although he is on his way to Seattle, he may be persuaded to return to this city in time to be present at the boosters' banquet which will be held on October 4.
