BRIDGE-WORKER HAS NARROW ESCAPE

TOM MCCARTHY FALLS FROM STRUCTURE AND ESCAPES DEATH BY MIRACLE.

Tom McCarthy, a young steel worker, who is employed on the Higgins avenue bridge, may bless the quick hand of his fellow worker and the kindness of the fates for the fact that he is not lying dead this morning, crushed flat by a 25-ton jack. As it is, the boy is suffering with a badly injured foot and a bruised body as the result of a fall from the top of the new bridge. The accident occurred at 10:30 yesterday morning. Young McCarthy and C. W. Johnson were working together jacking over one of the big 100-foot girders, when in some way the jack which McCarthy was using kicked and threw him to the ground. He fell 29 feet onto the rocks on his right foot, keeping erect only by his presence of mind. The accident was not over with the fall, however. The big jack, which weighs 25 tons or more, started to topple over after the boy had fallen. Johnson saw the start, however, and just as it balanced on the edge of the pier he caught it and pushed it back onto the bridge. A fraction of a second later and the big jack would have turned too far for the man to stop it and would undoubtedly have struck the boy beneath. Aside from a badly sprained and possibly a broken ankle, Mr. McCarthy is all right and a couple of weeks will see him at work on the bridge again.

A London veterinary hospital has a new ambulance for dogs in the form of a kennel, mounted on bicycle wheels and drawn by a motor cycle.

COLVILL DISCUSSES ORCHARD PESTS

MISSOULA HORTICULTURIST DISCUSSES INTERESTINGLY HIS IDEAS.

Writing from Missoula, H. C. B. Colvill tells his ideas on how to take care of orchard pests and tree diseases in a letter addressed to Editor Sutherland of the Rocky Mountain Husbandman. Mr. Colvill writes as follows:

The main idea is that, contrary to all previous ideas on that subject, our magnificent climate, high altitude and other advantages will no longer enable us to raise apples, pears and other fruits without lots of hard work. The old-timers had the best of us there and have had the cream of the market at very little expense in the raising. They deserved it for their enterprise, and are now I find in many cases selling out at prices that will keep them still without our strenuous struggles in comfort for the rest of their days.

Not a minute too soon either for many of them, for with the sudden increase of blight all over the state a lot of hard, monotonous and continuous work is (and is to be) the portion of those who bought their holdings. Attacking as it does our most profitable varieties it may yet change our market, driving us to resistant varieties. The oyster shell scale was rather successfully treated last winter at Hamilton, but after a summer of experimental work it is still with us and to stay. You remember one practical speaker telling us that 12 gallons of lime and sulphur solution to the tree was an easy and sure cure for it, put on in the dormant season. He was nearer the mark than I thought at the time. This season's work develops that it takes at least half of that on an ordinary tree to have much effect on the scale, and that ordinary applications have little or no effect. This is where the practical difficulties come in. It is difficult, almost impossible to get even six gallons of spray to stick where you want it, while the expense of treating many trees in that way is so large that a great many of our orchard men, even those well off find themselves unable to afford the treatment. Our main efforts are, therefore, toward a cheaper way of handling this pest.

Cooley Busy.

Professor Cooley has been doing an enormous lot of work on the oyster shell this summer; and it will probably take him another year of practical work before he finds himself able to publish anything definite on the subject, although I am hoping he will give us some results and practical hints before next spring. One point seemed proved from the large lot of spraying done by the board of horticulture at Lolo and that was that to get any results a thick coating had to remain on the trees until the scale hatched in June. If there was enough left on, the work was done on the young scale when they hatched. In one count 45 dead scales were counted before he ran across a living one. On another branch not so well coated 15 live ones were counted before the 45 dead ones were reached, both sprayed at a strength of one gallon of Rex lime and sulphur solution to 10 gallons of water. Although some trees there were sprayed with different strengths from straight Rex lime without water to one gallon to 10, the strength seemed to make no difference to results, and there was nothing doing till June. It all worked out to the advantage on those branches that retained a heavy coating, especially on the under side where most scale seem to stick.

This brings up another point, that is that unless a curved 45 per cent bend is used at the end of the rod it is impossible to kill enough of the scale to prevent the next increase, putting one right back to starting point. With a 45 (by twisting one's wrist) both sides and top and bottom can be covered. This alone would account for failures to control scale with lime and sulphur solutions. Also probably the season has a great deal to do with the result, and as to whether a wet or a dry season is best have I been unable to get an authoritative answer. Of all the other solutions tried, lime and sulphur, with one or two exceptions, still in the experimental stage, seems to be the best on the list so far. But on account of the expense, hardship and difficulty of using this preparation it is very likely that something better will be found and that shortly.

Rex Solution.

Instead of the Bordeaux mixture for apple scale I used the Rex solution, omitting the spring-spray in the dormant season. I applied the spray when the blooms turned red. The second when they dropped, and have used one or two later on the worst trees. On these later sprays a strength of one gallon Rex to 10 of water was used and on the other one gallon Rex to 15 of water. This got a heavy coating on the trees by the time scale hatched, which was not put on all at once, as I find with Rex at this time of the year one dare not overspray for fear of too much burning of leaves. Both scale and scalee seemed to be controlled completely, the former being especially bad in the orchard within a few rods of me.

In regard to the scale the experiment was spoiled from a technical point of view by my spraying after hatching time with scalecide and other preparations which may or may not have killed some scale. At any rate that orchard is spoiled for further experimental work on scale. I shall, however, continue to use Rex in the future in the same way omitting the Wormy Apples. We have this year hand picked something like 150 sacks of wormy fruit, having been thinning them since they began to show till quite recently. It will take from three to five sprays in the city yards to make any great improvement on this pest. This is 100 sacks of wormy fruit more than we ever picked before, and this work is very expensive. It is encouraging to find, however, that this pest in the country or commercial orchards can be so easily controlled with one or two thorough sprays, especially as he can combine the scale, scale and aphid sprays with the arsenate and thus reduce our expenses. The city man, however, must make up his mind either to do a lot of work or pay some one else to do it for him.

Other than this our apple cankers are continuing to do a lot of damage; and Professor Swingle tells me that spraying with bluestone solutions are not likely to control it as it differs somewhat from the Oregon cankers. Cutting out dead branches and also spots and painting cuts with an antiseptic solution are immediately necessary on finding dead spots. Constant and continuous work therefore, is the price of clean fruit in this section of the country.

BLAMES SPITE WORK FOR ARREST

CONSTABLE ALLEGES THAT SALOONKEEPER WITH GRUDGE CAUSED TROUBLE.

Deputy Sheriff C. A. Farrell returned from the Cour d'Alenes yesterday and brought back with him Constable Ed Hill, charged with taking money from saloonkeepers to permit gambling, and Barney Swanson, wanted in this city on a charge of gambling in a saloon in Saltese. Hill strenuously denies that he asked for and received money for permitting infractions of the gambling laws. It was alleged that he had for three months been holding up the saloonkeepers for protection from arrest. He states that he has been employed by a number of merchants and saloonkeepers in Saltese to act as a watchman, and was paid a small sum each month by the various men for whom he worked; he claims that the extra work was unsolicited, and that he did not hold up the saloonkeepers. He claims that the arrest is the result of spite work on the part of Bennie Smith, a saloonkeeper of the place, who became angered at Hill when the latter refused to "tip him off" that Deputy Sheriff Farrell was coming to arrest him some time ago, for permitting women to frequent his saloon.

BURMA CIGARETTES

The American engineer home for a visit from Burma accepted a proffered cigarette and rolled it gently between his fingers. "At the risk of seeming ungrateful," he said, "I rise to remark that the specimen you have so kindly tendered me strikes my acquired sense of the fitness of such things as highly inadequate. Merely as to size, I mean."

"The cigarette of Burma is a remarkable contrivance, ranging in length from a foot to a foot and a half, an inch in diameter and not unlike a giant firecracker in general shape. If composed wholly of tobacco it would be deadly. As a matter of fact, it contains very little tobacco. It is made of cornhusk or leaves of innocuous plants rolled tight and with shreds of the divine weed between the layers. One will last a smoker for a day, frequently an entire family for a day."

"The women of Burma, the most handsome and intelligent of their sex in the east, smoke these cigarettes habitually. It is something of a shock when the visitor first sees a pretty woman puffing at one of these enormous cylinders. It is still more of a shock if she is carrying a youngster astride her hip in approved native fashion. Between puffs she offers her cigarette to the child, who never refuses the invitation."

"As to effect, the Burmese cigarettes are practically harmless. As to 'avor,' they are insipid and unpleasant."—New York Herald.
