Ernest Carr, in a political satire, 'The Graftor,' presents a sketch which carries with it much truth in jests.

The grafter, Mr. Carr is typical of the part. He has the same kind of humor that usually underlies the shrewd politician and in his home life the soft part of his disposition, the native goodness in him, asserts itself when he would give his niece everything in the world she wants.

When Mr. Carr wants to call the police he says he calls for 1,000, and then he will be sure to get one. His definition of a grafter is a man who has gotten his education in the business college of politics.

Whenever the name of David Belasco precedes an attraction it is a beacon of assurance that the presentation is as perfect as brains, endeavor and capital can consummate, and whatever he does, he does thoroughly and accurately. This has been every occasion a Belasco production comes to Missoula and another exposition of his wonderful technique is assured at the Harnois theater Friday night, September 20, when he will present William C. DeMille's powerful play of today, 'The Woman.'

That Mr. Belasco keeps his finger upon the pulse of public taste can be attested by the success upon such a stage to be received year after year by the public with favor and eulogistic commendation.

The presentation of 'The Woman' at this time is especially auspicious as it throws a searchlight upon the inner workings of professional wingsters in Washington who prostitute legislation by methods commonly known as 'machine politics' and who resort to every known device, legitimate or otherwise, to further or attain their purpose.

Mr. DeMille has created a remarkable play and Mr. Belasco with his wizardry in stagecraft has embellished and produced this creation in a manner worthy of his great name and reputation.

The cast is the same as last season and includes such well-known play-actors as Marjorie Wood, Marion Barney, James Scobie, Howell Hansel, Hallett Thompson, Howard Granville, Austin Webb, Hugh Dillman, Frank Austin, Peter Raymond, Kalman Matus and others.

Editor, Daily Missoulian.—Some of your readers at this point have become involved in a discussion over the case of Charles H. Morse, the ex-'Ice King' convicted and sentenced by the government and recently pardoned out of the Charleston penitentiary. To settle the points at issue will you kindly answer the following questions regarding this case:

a. What was the specific charge on which he was convicted?

b. Did depositors in any of his banks lose any of the money so deposited?

Thanking you for information on these points, I am Very truly yours, F. L. KING. Evaro, Mont., Sept. 17, 1912.

An important event in the banking history of the year 1908 was the conviction of Charles W. Morse and Alfred H. Curtis, respectively vice president and president of the National Bank of North America in New York city. The so-called 'high finance' operations of Mr. Morse had figured prominently in the events preceding the crisis of October, 1907. His forced retirement from banking control and his disengagement of his connection with various banks was attended by the closing of the above-named bank on January 27. He and President Curtis were subsequently tried for misappropriation of the bank's funds and for permitting, knowingly, false entries to be made in the bank's books. The evidence indicated that Mr. Morse was the principal owner and the moving spirit in the doings of the bank, hence President Curtis was released under suspended sentence, while Morse was sentenced on November 6 to 15 years penal servitude in the federal prison at Atlanta, Georgia. The evidence showed that Mr. Morse had acquired control of nine different banks. His method was to buy a controlling portion of a bank's stock from the proceeds either of notes or another bank's stock. The new stock could be used as collateral to take up his notes or to assist in the purchase of control in another bank. In any case, the extension of banking control increased his opportunities for borrowing on American, United States Steel and United Copper stock, all of which Morse was manipulating by spectacular and unsound methods. It was shown that Morse had obtained loans from his banks by using office boys and stenographers as dummies. It was shown that Morse largely over-drew his account at the North American bank and that he borrowed heavily from it during the very week of the panic when the bank's reserves were already below the legal limit.

There were losses to the depositors.

ISIS The Favorite Place of Entertainment Program for Tonight and Thursday: Look This One Over: 'Pickwick's Predicament' From the Pickwick Papers by Chas. Dickens. Adapted from that portion of the book which deals with the celebrated breach of promise suit brought by Mrs. Bardell against Mr. Pickwick. This makes a remarkably entertaining film. The humor is infectious, the characters are portrayed just as Dickens dressed them and the whole effect is most artistic. 'A Change of Spirit' This excellent picture is the noted Biograph company's. Best offering for the month—introducing an all-star cast. 'On the Ranch' This popular picture will furnish plenty of excitement for the evening entertainment. One that will be enjoyed by all.
