THE PROGRESSIVES.

Today, the Montana legislature will elect a United States senator. For the first time in the history of this state, the legislature's action will be merely the confirmation of the expressed wish of the people...

Last week's preliminaries cleared the track for real business. Yesterday was a sort of get-together day after the Sunday recess, and today there will be the election of a senator...

The week showed, too, that the progressives may be depended upon. Their position has been plainly stated and it is a recognized fact that they will hold to that position...

WARREN OF WYOMING.

Next to Utah, Wyoming of all the mountain states is most closely held under machine control in politics. For a quarter of a century, as territory and as state, Wyoming has been in the grasp of a wonderfully well organized band of politicians...

Consolidation will never come if it is to be made the cat's paw of politicians. Congress can handle big issues better than it can deal with Big Business.

FEED THE BIRDS.

A few days ago The Missoulian suggested that housekeepers should feed the birds which make their winter home here. With the unusual fall of snow of the past few days, it has become all the more desirable that these little friends of ours should receive this attention from us...

The birds can get them and we owe it to the birds to do this. In the spring they will repay us many times over and in the summer they will renew our obligation to them.

IN TEXAS.

The Texas legislature assembles today for its regular session. To us, who have come to regard Texas in its comic-opera light, it seems strange that the principal issue before this session should be the question of state-wide prohibition.

Those who went to the Harnois theater last night, expecting to see William Howard Taft, were happily disappointed.

TWO DIE IN COLLISION.

Birmingham, England, Jan. 13.—Two passengers were killed and 40 injured in a collision on the Midland railroad today when an express train crashed into an accommodation train at Bromford bridge.

REGULATION OF RATES

The real importance of the announcement that the Milwaukee railway is to be electrified over a considerable portion of its line did not lie in the fact that this step is probably the first movement toward the complete substitution of electric power for steam on the great railway system.

The application of the power from the Falls of the Missouri to the operation of the Milwaukee railway system was made possible through a grant from the department of the interior and this grant, in turn, was made possible by the agreement of the railway company and the power company to the terms of regulation laid down by the secretary of the interior.

A Washington newspaper tells us that the agreement was reached amicably; the two companies and the department found it possible to co-operate cordially and effectively in working out the terms of a grant so as to recognize both public and private interests and rights.

Herein lies the far-reaching significance of the permit which was granted by the interior department to the two operating companies. It has shown that it is possible to have government regulation of such affairs without working any injury to the concern involved and without impairing the rights of the public.

The experience of the railways in this matter of regulation was that it was to their advantage, although it had been resisted to the uttermost as inimical to the welfare of the transportation companies.

In the agreement which led to the issue of the permit to the Milwaukee company and to the Great Falls power concern, there is mutual recognition of rights. The department reserves the right to inspect the rates of service; there is provision for the inspection by the government of all the books of the company; the sale of power to the United States, to the state of Montana and to municipalities in the state, must be at as low a rate as is made to the railway company; there is no transfer permitted of the grant; the company is forbidden to claim any earning value for the permit.

Here is a practical instance of rate regulation. It has been worked out by practical business men. They have found it to their advantage to recognize the rights of the public. The public, through the government, gives full recognition to the rights of the corporation.

The Gaelic Language

By Frederic J. Haskin

One of the strongest proofs of the hold which the Irish nation will ever have upon the hearts of its people is the affection with which they cling to the old Gaelic tongue with all of its ancient traditions.

The Gaelic language is taught in a number of the leading American universities. At Harvard, Professor Robinson, one of the recognized philologists of the world, conducts Gaelic classes and is an enthusiastic Gaelic scholar.

There is a flourishing Gaelic society in the national capital which has a number of corresponding members in different states. The object is to increase the knowledge and interest in this ancient vernacular.

In his work upon Gaelic literature, Matthew Arnold deals extensively with the philological value of the Gaelic which is one of the two great divisions of the Celtic language.

Wallace, Jan. 13.—(Special.)—Today's proceedings in the big mining suit between the Stewart and Ontario companies in the district court brought much joy to the latter, who claim to have made the greatest showing for their side since the suit began, over a week ago.

Wallace, Jan. 13.—(Special.)—Today's proceedings in the big mining suit between the Stewart and Ontario companies in the district court brought much joy to the latter, who claim to have made the greatest showing for their side since the suit began, over a week ago.

Many distinguished French, German and English scientists are now engaged upon the elucidation of the Gaelic literature which goes back to the eighth or ninth century.

While the Gaelic league is working valiantly to increase interest in the preservation of this language, it must be assumed that it ever has been a dead language or even in danger of becoming one.

The churches, both Catholic and Protestant, have caught the enthusiasm for reviving the Gaelic language, and sermons in that language are frequent in all the churches.

The interest is not confined to speaking the language, for most of the Irish papers publish some columns of Gaelic in their regular editions, while others print occasional issues in the Gaelic text.

The Gaelic literature which is gradually becoming known to the world. The strongest Gaelic colony in the western hemisphere is in Nova Scotia, where the language is spoken by 75,000 people.
