MONDAY, JULY 27, 1914.

Such souls Whose sudden visitations daze the world, Vanish like lightning, but they leave behind A voice that in the distance far away Wakens the slumbering ages. —Sir Henry Taylor.

LOOKING UP "It's always morning somewhere."

Ever the ideal editorial column is devised it will be to my way of thinking, one in which the most preposterous, most outrageous statements are made every day.

For it is to inspire thought that every editorial column should exist. It may serve at times to convince the unbelieving to the right side of some important question, but generally its mission should be to present problems in such a way that all who read will be driven to think.

Give a man an axiom with his breakfast and he will pay no attention to it, hurl at his head some radical or preposterous remark about an institution that affects his daily life and he will be driven to remembrance and thence to healthy thought.

It is not because we are remorseless or avaricious as a nation that we let employers murder children over machines. It is not because we are heartless that we see women underpaid and men forced to starve because of inability to do work the world so clearly needs.

So, I say, let editorial writers not deal in fine phrases and old saws. Rather let them offend convention and startle their readers. It is better that a newspaper (and as you must admit, for their missions are similar, a preacher) should be unreasonably radical and offensive to cause one man to think earnestly than that it should preach that all who listened would feel at ease in their world.

KICKED TO DEATH. Fergus Falls, Minn., July 26.—Fred Meier, a farmer living on the east side of the county, was hitching horses when one of the animals kicked him in the head. He fell back and died instantly.

BEATING THE GAME.

Mr. C. H. Hall— Will you kindly request The Missoulian to publish the within clipping from the Christian Science Monitor? Missoula, Mont. A DEMOCRAT.

It is one of the fixed rules of The Missoulian office that no communications will be published unless the names of the writers are known to the editorial office. But here is a circumvention of that rule, so ingenious, that the regulation is for once waived.

Mr. Hall says he has not the slightest idea who wrote the letter; it came in his mail and he turned it over to the editorial desk of The Missoulian at once. But it is a clever way to beat the game. The writer, evidently knowing The Missoulian rule, thought that the sponsorship of Mr. Hall would be sufficient.

The Missoulian has admiration for Mr. Hall's talents and respects his position in the community, but not even this admiration and this respect would lead to a departure from The Missoulian's established rule. It is the ingenuity of "A Democrat" which forces, through sheer delight in the nerve of the unsigned letter, to give it space.

The clipping from The Christian Science Monitor, which was "within," is this:

It is gratifying to know that the business world is taking a more hopeful view of conditions. Sentiment is decidedly better. As compared with the situation a month ago, it is readily seen that general business the world over is improved. Of course there is some irregularity in the reports from the various commercial and industrial centers, but taken as a whole there has been decided change for the better.

There has been a great deal of needless agitation regarding business, and it is doubtless a fact that it is still suffering more from fright than anything else. There was much that was wrong, and required correction, it is true, but what is needed now is confidence. By putting self-interest aside and making more practical use of the Golden Rule the entire business structure would soon show a sturdy growth.

That is nothing new. It is simply a restatement of Dr. Wilson's "psychological depression" diagnosis. It was reiterated in a press dispatch which occupied a prominent position on the first page of The Missoulian, Saturday morning. It means, plainly stated, that all the country's financial troubles are imaginary.

And that is good Christian Science. All woes are imaginary in the doctrine of the scientists, as we understand that doctrine. And if physical suffering is merely mental error, why should not the same reasoning apply to financial distress?

All last winter, when the snow was deep, the sidewalk in front of the Missoula Christian Science church was not shoveled off. Those of us who had to wade through the snow there when it was soft and who had perilously to climb over it when it got hard, "imagined" that it was a disagreeable situation. But it was probably "psychological depression."

And this "within clipping" applies that very sort of solution of the financial slump into which the country has fallen just at present. Maybe, it is the right solution, but it doesn't seem so to the man who has to scramble, every Monday morning to rustle enough cash to meet a payroll's demands.

On the Spur of the Moment

The Old Farm. The city man had often been told of the manifold bliss and charm Of a summer spent in deep content back home on the dear old farm. Of the meadows sweet and the joy complete out there in the rural part; So he packed his grip for a country trip and waited for the time to start. He longed each day for the dear old hay where the faithful hens would nest, And the dear old cows and the dear old sows and the calves and all the rest. He resolved to seek for a single week the quiet of country life, And he hid him thence at a small expense long miles from the city's strife. At the hour of four they assailed his door and told him to hustle out; No man alive should sleep till five unless he was sure a lout. No chance to snirk—they made him work till the sun sank in the west; With the dear old hoe he was made to go and labor his level best. And the dear old hay in an awkward way he pitched till his back was sore; And the dear old churn aunt let him turn for fifteen hours or more. And folks made game of his tired frame and its scars from the active life; genial crayon portrait canvasser, who left this town two days ago on a canvassing trip. It is feared that he has met with foul play, as no picture postcards have been received at the local postoffice for the village milliner. Mr. Amasa Jones of our village has been stung again. He sent to mail order house for a glass eye and he can't see with it any better than he could before.

Things to Think About. Last winter's shawl makes a handy little fly-swatter. Any lady can make a very stylish summer hat out of a second-hand wire toaster and a couple of yards of baby ribbon.

There are very few actors in this country who do not own fur trimmed overcoats. There isn't a post in America who knows how to run an automobile. The richest man in the United States can't eat a piece of beefsteak or a buckwheat cake. There hasn't been a president with whiskers since Benjamin Harrison.

THE SUPREME COURT

(Great Falls Tribune.) The Great Falls Leader republishes, presumably with approval, a long editorial from The Missoulian, the purport of which is that as a sort of reward of merit for their decision in the initiative and referendum law the three judges of the supreme court should be removed from the chances of partisan politics and be unanimously endorsed by the three political parties and elected without a contest. It does not specifically say that, but that is the logical conclusion to be drawn from what it does say, and it does specifically suggest that the progressive party should support Judge Holloway, whose term expires next January, and who has announced himself as a candidate for re-election on the standpat republican ticket.

The Missoulian goes on to say that the doctrine announced in the recent supreme court decision "is the cardinal doctrine of the progressive party." If it is it was announced by the supreme court of Montana long before the progressive party was heard of. It was laid down as a general principle in the Benton-Pigott election contest case that no failure of an election official to carry out the law in its technical details could invalidate or set aside the will of the people as expressed at the ballot box. We do not clearly remember just now how the supreme court was made up at the time, but our impression is that there were two republican and one democratic judge on the bench, the same as there is at present. At any rate, the doctrine is good sound doctrine, and the progressive party and no other party has any copyright on it, or superior claim to it.

Many years ago the Tribune advocated a non-partisan ticket, it believes that our supreme court judges always have been non-partisan, so far as their action on the bench goes. It believes that they should be removed from the ups and downs of partisan politics, and should not be nominated on a party ticket or elected by a party vote. But it does not believe that one or all of the judges should receive the support of a political party as a reward of merit for any decision they may have made on the bench. We are in full accord with the decision of the supreme court on the initiative and referendum case. We believe that the decision is sound in law and in equity, and that it accords with previous decisions of the supreme court in this state since the Benton-Pigott case. But we believe also that the supreme court simply decided that case in accord with their duty in view of the law and the facts before it, and if these had indicated to them a contrary decision they would have found against the law with the same unanimity, and be just as worthy of support for re-election without regard to partisan considerations. The important thing for the citizen to consider, whether he be affiliated with the democratic party, the republican or progressive party, when he comes to cast his vote for a supreme court justice, is not whether the decisions of the judge reflect the citizen's views in the questions at issue or not, but whether they are dictated by a lofty sense of justice and equity. If we are to reward judges who decide questions in our liking and punish those who do not, we will never have any very reliable and independent court of last resort.

We have no objection to the conclusions reached by The Missoulian, but we think it reaches these conclusions through doubtful premises. We do not care particularly whether the decisions of our supreme court please the majority of the voters or not, so long as we are satisfied that these conclusions are the fruit of sound logic, calm and clear judgment, and in accord with the law and equity in the case, and in the absence of proof to the contrary we are willing to believe that the court acts on these principles with better knowledge of the facts than it is possible for the ordinary layman to have.

MISSED IT.

(From Judge.) "What did you think of the automobile race?" "I didn't see it." "You didn't see it? Why, I saw you at the track!" "Yes, I was at the track, but I had to wink just at the wrong time, and whip I got through, the race was over."

The Way They Take It WATCHING LOUISIANA. (Lewistown News.) The movement of democrats in Louisiana to join forces with the progressive party is the logical sequence of political events, the natural course of sentiment among dissatisfied democrats in every southern state, and, indeed, in every state in the Union, says the Cincinnati Enquirer.

NEW GRAND RULER ELECTED BY ELKS. Raymond Benjamin of San Francisco, new grand elected ruler of the Elks, was given the highest office within the gift of that organization at the most remarkable convention ever held by the Elks. The convention, which started last week, also was the grand jubilee reunion of the lodge and was featured by festivities never before attempted in this country.

THE PRICE SHE PAYS. There is hardly an American woman nowadays who can keep pace with the demands made upon her time and energy without paying the penalty of ill-health. It may be that dreadful backache, dragging pains, headaches, nervousness or the tortures of a displacement. It is the price she pays. To women in this condition Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound comes as a boon and a blessing. A simple remedy made from roots and herbs which brings glorious health to suffering women.—Adv.

THE SOLID SOUTH. (Kallispell Inter Lake.) Democrats are not finding much consolation in the news from Louisiana. It seems that at last the "solid south" is to receive a solar plexus blow. The Louisiana democrats are not in accord with the administration's tariff program and the desertion to the Bull Moose camp has already begun.

THE BOLD SOUTH. (Kallispell Inter Lake.) The Third congressional district is the first to make the break, where the entire democratic congressional committee went over to the progressive party in a body. The press dispatch carries the information that the men who broke away from the democratic ranks are all active leaders in the district and were regarded as the strongest in the party. It is predicted that their bolt will mean the success of the progressive congressional ticket, and it is feared that the split will extend over the entire state. The dispatch reads: "The democrats who have jumped the Third congressional committee are the best men in the district and are daily going over the district perfecting an organization. The big landslide in the state will not come in the congressional election in November, however. That will be in 1916. This fall the Third district, and possibly one other district will elect progressive members of congress. That will start the ball rolling."
