Caught on the Run About Town

Ah, it's weary in a print shop in the middle of a shift, with the wire ticking messages of woe, with the thimble broadsides and the presses' roaring lift, and it's hard to keep a pencil on the go. But last night the press stopped roaring and the ticker hushed its tongue, and the office most politely slipped away—There I stood, miles back in summer in a wood, untouched and young, where the only noisy creature was a jay. By a pool, deep, clear, pellucid, flecked with dancing bits of dark from the leaves that dangled in it, wet and cool. Age-old mountains cleaved the heavens with their knife-tops, white and stark, and cut down again beneath me in the pool. Still I feel those sweet, fresh breezes, still I smell that flood of June, still the pool's cool breath is on me as I write. I can hear that blue-jay squawking at his always half-learned time, I can taste the air and glory in its lift. Came again the hated clatter of the ticker, scandalous; and the jungle of the phone's excited bell. To go back there in the mountains I'd given all I had, but the printers howled for "copy." Ain't it hell.

Sunday night, while introducing himself to his Missoula audience, Dr. Thomas E. Green, chauntauqua lecturer, told an amusing story of his first visit to the city. It was a good many years ago, Dr. Green recalled, when he first came to the city. He delivered a lecture at Fort Missoula and then came to town for the night. "Remember well," said Dr. Green, "that the night of my lecture at the fort was March 31. Green's audience vividly recalls the date to me. The next morning I had come to town, you understand—I was amazed to read in the morning paper that one of unusual value had been discovered in the Missoula river, near the bridge in the center of the city. It was thought, the paper said, that the gold had been washed down the stream in some flood or other. At present the ore was being assayed and its real value had not been determined, but old-time miners had expressed the opinion that richer ore never had been found in Montana. Tomdewfoot that I was, I rushed to the bridge to get an early-morning glimpse of the ore. To my dismay a great crowd was before me, though I had risen early. Just as I was preparing to shoulder my way through the crowd an inspiration came to me like a bolt from the blue sky. The inspiration made me turn and hurry for the hotel. I even stood on the shady side of the street and lunged my head. I think I mentioned that I lectured on the evening of March 31, didn't I?"

AN OLD STORY

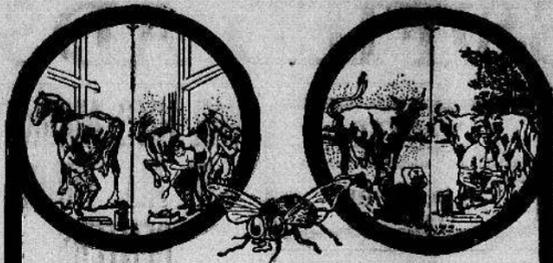

If, on his first visit, Missoula played a practical joke on Dr. Green it could not do him honor enough on his return. Yesterday the principal topic of conversation everywhere was the lecture delivered by the peace advocate at Sunday evening's chauntauqua program. No lecture delivered here in years has pleased so many people. The power of Dr. Green's personality, the charm of his oratory and the strength of his subject struck Missoula forcibly and kept the city talking all day. Without doubt he is the most brilliant orator, speaking from an artistic standpoint, who has visited Missoula in many, many moons. Talking of anything, Dr. Green would be worth hearing, for he has a master's understanding of the harmony of language. Apply this artistry to a problem of world importance, well understood and completely in hand, and you have what a fortunate audience heard Sunday evening. Dr. Green has traveled through the world to study war and he speaks from an experience it would be hard to match. The facts he gave Sunday night were of stunning force; he made them more powerful by presenting them well. The high points of the speaker's picture of the horrors of war were marvelous bits of oratory. It is to be regretted that any Missoula people failed to hear the lecture. The pleasure taken in Dr. Green's address is typical of the enjoyment Missoula has gained from all numbers of lectures of the chauntauqua series. It is as much of the chauntauqua series as has been given. The Ellison-White people are making good their promises, generous as they were.

GREEN GREAT

Through his column Caruso, the abused and belabored palmy of R. R. Wilbur's household, sends vacation greetings to his sympathetic friends. For the first time in his life of pain and sorrow Caruso is enjoying a rest. Like other masters who will grant their slaves brief respite that they may slave longer, Daddy Wilbur has laid Caruso off for a time. "This month the tired horse will spend barefoot in a clover patch. His harness and his shoes have been taken off and he is resting in contemplative peace. Knowing that the horse's savage disposition is the inevitable result of mistreatment, Daddy Wilbur has always tried to make Caruso appear contented and well-beloved, though it is a matter of record that the horse once tried to run down a newspaper reporter who had spoken kindly of Wilbur. So it is easy to understand Daddy's last bulletin on the animal's condition. "He lifted one leg this morning," says the bulletin, "and it didn't seem to hurt him. He looks as if he might try to roll over in another week. When he does his vacation will come to an end." At any rate, the humane society need not interfere for a week.

LAD OF NEW YORK IN SANDERS COUNTY DISAPPEARS FROM LOLO ED DONLAN RESIDES

ISADORE BISCHOFF, TWELVE YEARS OLD, MAY BE HOME-SICK AND HIKING BACK.

Isadore Bischoff, a 12-year-old youth who recently came from New York to make his home with his brother, S. J. Bischoff at Lolo, disappeared from the Bischoff home yesterday forenoon and up to a late hour last night had not been located. Mr. Bischoff is greatly worried over the lad's disappearance and neighbors joined with him last night in making a search throughout the community. Up to midnight all efforts to get trace of the missing boy had been fruitless.

The officers here were notified and are keeping a sharp lookout. Isadore came from New York three weeks ago. He has been helping his brother about the orchard lately and seemed contented enough in his new surroundings. "My brother gave no hint of being homesick," said Mr. Bischoff to a Missoulian reporter last night. "He didn't know how to fish and was not acquainted with any of the other boys of this neighborhood, so we don't think he wandered off with any of them on a fishing expedition. This morning at 10:30 he was last seen at Lolo when he stopped at a grocery store and purchased some apples. He left without making any comment and started off down the road towards the river. This is the last trace of him that we have been able to find."

Isadore Bischoff is of medium build for a boy of 12, is of light complexion and has light hair which he combs straight back. When he left he was wearing a pair of brown overalls, a shirt with black and white stripes, a black and white checkered cap and black shoes and stockings. Any information will be gladly received by the brother who may be communicated with over the telephone, No. 19 J-2.

ROYAL PARTY WRECKED BUT NOBODY DROWNED

Ottawa, Ont., July 27.—The Duke of Connaught, retiring governor general of the Dominion of Canada, the Duchess and Princess Patricia, their daughter, escaped drowning last Saturday. It became known here today. Two motorboats in which they were sailing on the Lake of the Woods at Kenora, struck floating logs with such speed that holes were driven through their sheathing and they began filling. Motorboats, seeing the accident, speeded to the rescue, taking the duke, his family and suite off the boats just before they sank.

EXCITING HOLDUP ONE IS SHOT BY HELD

DR. BOTSFORD VICTIM OF TWO MASKED MEN IN SOUTH SIDE RESTAURANT.

Missoula had a sure-enough holdup affair last night at 11 o'clock, when two masked men entered the little restaurant on South Higgins avenue in the first block from the end of the bridge, and at the point of a gun took $10 away from L. P. Botsford, who, with his wife and baby, was eating at a table in the place. The men went to the street but were closely followed by Dr. Botsford, who halted the first man he saw and gave the alarm. This man happened to be Traffic Policeman Held, who was on his motorcycle. He gave chase immediately and followed the holdups around the corner on South Third street. Both were running nearly a block away when Held opened fire. At the third shot one of the men fell. The bullet struck him in the right ankle, fracturing the bone. The other man escaped for the time in the darkness, although he was trailed for some distance by Officer Held, assisted by Officers Sweeney and Jack Rice, who were on the scene within a few minutes after the shooting took place.

At 1 o'clock this morning, however, a man answering the description of the second holdup fellow was caught by Officer Jack Rice west of the Milwaukee depot on the track. From the man's actions and his clothes, as described by Dr. Botsford, the officers believe that he is unquestionably the man who escaped.

Victim's Story.

Dr. Botsford was formerly located at Victor, but had arranged to locate at Superior and was waiting for the Milwaukee train last night, when he chanced to fall a victim of the robbers. To a Missoulian reporter he told the story of the affair as follows:

"My wife and I were waiting for the train, which was an hour late, and decided to get a lunch at this little restaurant. We were seated at a table farthest from the door on the right-hand side. My back was to the door and I was holding the baby. We heard someone enter the place, but neither of us noticed who it was until my wife saw the two masked men as they advanced, one of them having me covered with a big revolver. She startled me with a scream of fright, and I turned quickly to look into that big moon. The fellow with the gun ordered me to stand up and turn around and hand over my money. "This I did, being relieved of about $10, all in silver. The other man was working with the cash register, and failing to open it he ordered me up front and to open the money till quick. I had to explain to him that I wasn't the proprietor, and knew no more about the combination than he did. Then both men left together. In the meantime the mask, a red handkerchief, fell off one man's face. He was the man with the gun and the one who was shot and captured later. I followed them out as soon as I dared, and they were still in sight, walking toward the bridge. A man was passing on a motorcycle. I called to him and told of the holdup. He, it seems, was an officer, and gave chase around the corner. I got around just in time to see the man fall at the third shot—I think it was three."

Several men were attracted by the shooting and carried the injured man to the South Side drug store, where he was given attention by Dr. Bourdeau, who later took him to the hospital in his automobile. Officer Held called for help and started out to take up the trail of the other robber.

Real Excitement.

Dr. Botsford, however, was detained in caring for his wife and baby after giving the alarm, and so did not see the real excitement which took place when Officer Held tackled the holdups. The men, not aware that an officer was on his trail, but knowing the alarm had been sounded, came hurriedly past the drug store corner and were not checked in their language in ordering several women and two or three men, who had run out upon hearing shouts, back into the store "or get filled with lead." Held made a short circle on his motorcycle and dismounted in the middle of third street and called to the holdups to stop. They answered him with the same sort of a threat. Then Held shot a couple of times in the air. The robbers returned the fire, and a couple of bullets whizzed close to the officer, who "beat it" for the protection of the brick wall at the corner. As the men started to run Held fired again, and once more the robbers replied. At the next shot one man fell. His partner crouched behind the injured man for protection, shot again at the officer, and then leaped down the Milwaukee lawn, ran across the foot bridge and went down the track.

Holds Money in Hand.

There was no officer to go with the injured man to the hospital, and it was not until after his wound had been dressed that it was learned that he was still in possession of his revolver when he reached the institution, and also had some money. A search through his clothing failed to locate the money, but later an attendant discovered that the man was holding six silver dollars in one hand. He had to be forced to give this up. Dr. Pixley assisted Dr. Bourdeau in attending to the wound, and reported it to be a comminuted compound fracture of the right ankle. The robber gave his name as John Raymond, said he was 28 years old, and that his home was in Chicago.

Dr. and Mrs. Botsford continued to Superior last night, considerably unnerved from their exciting experience.
