

THE THEATERS

EDDY O'BRIEN AND LOTTIE DARRAGH, COMEDY SINGING, TALK-AND DANCING.

Bijou.
A change of program will be given at the Bijou theater tonight. On the vaudeville bill Eddie O'Brien and Lottie Darragh are featured in a highly entertaining Irish comedy tramp act of singing, dancing and funny victimisms. Two comedies will be shown on the picture program entitled "It Was Some Party," and George Ade's fable of "The Higher Education That Was Too High for the Old Man." The dramatic offering is a Kalem entitled "The Political Boss."

Empress.
Lord Bulwer Lytton immortalized himself as the author of "The Last Days of Pompeii." George Kleine and the Ambrosio company have ingeniously won a high place in the photoplay temple of fame by its matchless interpretation of the absorbing story through motion pictures. For a solid one hour and a half, at each performance at the Empress theater yesterday, the graphic spectacle unfolded itself to the vision and as the scenes follow each other, the audiences stood amazed at the matchless beauty and almost superlative magnitude of the work. For immensity, "The Last Days of Pompeii" surpasses any previous achievement in picturedom. For artistry and power it is unequalled. It awakens the sympathy following the tragic despair of the blind Lydia, it stirs the imagination with the wondrous beauty of stage setting and scenic effect. It inspires awe and dread and fear as lurid Vesuvius belches forth tongues of livid flame and ashes and lava, only to sweep thousands to eternal destruction. It invites horror and detestation at the Priest of Egypt who uses his sacred office to aid unholy passion and tear down and confound the innocent. It melts the soul in tender pity at the unrequited love of Nydia whose soul finally finds rest in the quiet waters of the Italian sea.

This picture will be shown again and for the last time today. Another installment of "Our Mutual Girl" will be shown also today. While arranging Margaret's hair, Lewis, "Our Mutual Girl's" maid, drops a mirror to the floor and breaks it. The maid, being superstitious, is much frightened at this, and decides to go to a fortune teller to find out what to do about the matter. Margaret, becoming curious herself, goes with Madge Travers to see Madame Dolores, a seeress. Madame Dolores assures Margaret that she will not be affected by the incident, but warns her that she is beset by a grave danger, and should go to the seaside. Her adventures there make up an absorbing story this week.

FOREST FIRE REPORTED NEAR STATION OF CYR

Late last night a new forest fire, said to be burning lively, was reported at Cyr on the Wallace branch of the Northern Pacific. The fire was discovered by a passing train crew which left word at the next station. The particulars could not be learned but the forest service is making an investigation. Forest fire conditions throughout the district were splendid yesterday. The Flathead fire, still burning but under control and not spreading, is the only real fire now remaining in the district.
