FOUR HUNDRED FEET OVER HIGH CLIFF HUNTER FALLS

YOUNG MAN OF STEVENSVILLE TAKES DESPERATE CHANCE FOR DEATH SHOT

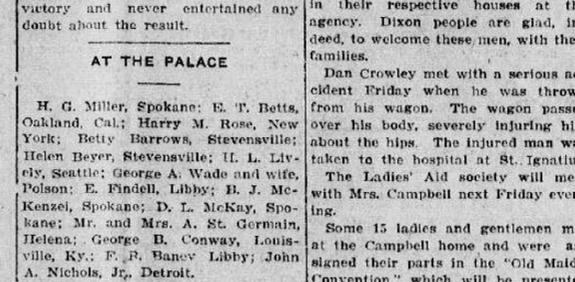

Stevensville, Nov. 8.—(Special)—How Henry Fehrenkent, a young orchardist of Three Mile, risked his life to get a shot at a mountain goat, and fell over a cliff for a distance of 400 feet as a result of his foolhardiness, being injured so badly that it has been impossible to bring him out of the mountains, was the story brought here by Lee Bass this morning. At Mill Creek Lake. Fehrenkent and Bass, the latter also of this place, and Guy Willie of Hamilton, last Friday took three cans of trout fry, shipped here from the Bozeman hatchery, to Mill creek lake, 14 miles into the mountains, for planting. On their way home they diverged from the trail to do a little hunting. They ran across some goats and all three men shot into the herd. Bass and Willie each killed an animal outright, Fehrenkent crippled the one he tried to bag and was following it over some very rough country when the accident happened. After the injured goat. The hunter located his goat and crawled out to the edge of a dangerous cliff to get another shot. In this he succeeded. His aim was good and the animal fell dead. But almost simultaneously with the report of the gun the point of rock upon which Fehrenkent had crawled, gave way and down he fell, bounding from rock to rock, rolling over and over until he reached the bottom of the almost perpendicular 400-foot wall. No Bones Broken. Although no bones were broken, Fehrenkent was terribly bruised and battered. He may have suffered internal injuries. His companions prepared a camp and made him as easy as possible, heating goat tallow to rub into his stiffened and swollen muscles and joints. In spite of this treatment the young man was unable to be moved today and Mr. Bass came out to secure aid. Dr. Kellogg and John Faust returned with him this afternoon, with an additional pack horse and necessary supplies for an emergency. The injured man will be brought here tomorrow, if possible.

NOTES ON BACTERIA

(By E. Leech, F. R. H. S., of Stevensville). The literature abounds in references to what are regarded as cases of plant bacteriosis, cases which as yet rest upon very incomplete evidence. In many of these bacteria are found in abundance in the diseased tissue, but pathogenicity has not been proved by inoculation, nor pure culture made. Among such incompletely studied diseases may be mentioned those of geranium, celery, onion, cucumber, orchard grass, lettuce (one lettuce disease is due to a mottle rod-shaped organism cultured and inoculated, but not named), strawberries, mulberry, hemp, caleolaris. There are several obscure bacterial beet diseases; another cabbage rot due to Pseudomonas; a decay of apples said by Prilleux to be due to a bacillus; the blossom-end rot of tomatoes, which is, perhaps, bacterial; an ash bark disease, and an ash canker; an ivy canker; a grape disease; a salsify rot; a carnation spot, and a banana disease; a gummosis of tobacco seedling; also perhaps the serious widespread mosaic disease of tobacco and an orchid gummosis. Next week I will deal with the scurfy scale, and continue with the different scales, scabs, etc.
