Caught on the Run About Town

Yesterday Roy Wilbur received a card from Sid Coffee, who is on his way east. The card contained but a brief message: "They give the chickens their share here." was Mr. Coffee's note on the margin of the picture side where were shown a group of beautiful buildings. These proved, upon close inspection, to be the fair buildings at the Minnesota state fair. One of the most imposing buildings of the group was one designated as "poultry." It is evident that Mr. Coffee was impressed with this fact and thought he would send word right back home to encourage the local fanciers in their efforts to grow more chickens and better chickens in western Montana. Minnesota is a great chicken state. Its annual poultry shows bring together a large assortment of the highest-scoring birds to be found in the country. The state recognizes the importance of the industry by providing for the chickens one of the best buildings of the fair group.

The card from Mr. Coffee was timely. "It is for just such a building as that," said Daddy Wilbur, "that we are working here in the Western Montana Poultry association. I do not mean that we are working to this end directly. We have not asked for a building. What we are trying to do is to stimulate such an interest in the poultry business and to make it of such importance in the state that the building will come of its own accord. Our annual show, which is to be opened here next Tuesday, is meant to be educational. The exhibitors have done much to encourage fanciers along the right lines and we hope this one will be of equal value. The growth of the poultry business in western Montana has been steady. Those who have given it proper attention and study have been successful. Those who have attempted to fake along, who expected the hens and the roosters to run the ranch instead of themselves, have failed. But the industry has flourished here. Our annual shows demonstrate that the quality of western Montana chickens are up to the highest standard. What we need now is a larger number of chickens."

The plans for the Western Montana chicken show are maturing rapidly. The show room, the same one as used last year on West Front street, has been renovated and yesterday the coops were put in place. There will be room for about 1,200 birds this year, the arrangement of the coops giving more opportunity for all of the show birds to be seen at equal advantage by the spectators. Everything is practically ready for the opening of the show next Tuesday morning. Judge Miller Pervis, who is to score the birds this year, will arrive Sunday from Wendell, Idaho. He will begin his work the second day of the show and finish as quickly as possible. There will be no delay in placing the ribbons. Spectators should know the prize winners Wednesday evening. There will be special entertainment every evening and this year it will be worth attending.

City Clerk Harris will be the "big rooster" at the show this year, because he is secretary of the Western Montana Poultry association and will have to look after the handling of the entries and all of the details of the show. Mr. Harris is himself a fancier, and for several years has been winning prizes with his own birds. Yesterday Secretary Harris was busy distributing the new premium lists and programs. Those who have failed to get copies of the little booklet that tells all about the show and the prizes offered, may secure them at Mr. Harris' office at the city hall, or from Lou Kennedy, at his store on upper Higgins avenue.

"The western Montana chicken show is going to be a big boost for the state show this year," WILL BOOST said a man from STATE SHOWS Stevensville yesterday. "The breeders will bring a goodly number of birds to Missoula to have them scored and in this way will be better qualified to select the ones that will have a chance of winning at the state show. Stevensville is undertaking the state show plans with much earnestness. We believe that the Bitter Root should be the ideal chicken country of the world and we are anxious to show what we have in the way of fancy and utility stock. The secretary of the show has already received inquiries for programs and entry blanks in such numbers as to insure a show of many birds. We are looking to see the state show a hummer. Missoula fanciers are helping. We in turn have done all we can to make your show here a success. There will be many Bitter Root breeders entered when the doors are opened next Tuesday."
