Cancer!

Some Ways by Which It Can Be Prevented.

Cancer is curable if caught early enough.

It is better, however, to prevent it. By preventing as much as possible the irritation of tissues in every part of the body.

By eating only such foods as are absolutely clean, or such foods as have been made sterile by thorough cooking.

In eating fruits, for instance, the peel should be carefully removed and the hands or the utensils which have come in contact with the skins of the fruit should not come in contact with the fruit to be eaten.

For instance, in peeling a banana, the hand which is used for pulling off the peel may easily become covered with filth which has been deposited upon this peel, by flies or street dust, which has been blown upon the surface of this fruit, if it has not been protected.

In eating meats that have not been thoroughly cooked, it is quite possible that infectious material may be carried into the stomach.

In eating vegetables such as radishes, lettuce and celery that have been sprinkled with liquid manure, there is danger from consuming this filth if these vegetables have not been thoroughly cleaned or cooked.

A Paris Favorite

Marked favor will be given all-black costumes this winter. An authoritative photo from Paris indicates the popularity of all-black even for girls.

Note also the round neck, in this case gut rather high.

This frock is typical of prevailing Paris modes—there is no particular feature to distract the attention. The entire thought of the designer was given to the general outline and the "ensemble" or effect of the gown as a whole.

HOW MARY LOST A TIP.

Soon after a certain judge of the supreme court of Rhode Island had been appointed he went down into one of the southern counties to sit for a week. He was well satisfied with himself.

"Mary," he said to the Irish waitress at the hotel where he was stopping, "you've been in this country how long?"

"Two years, sir," she said.

"Sure, it's well enough," answered Mary.

"But, Mary," the judge continued, "you have many privileges in this country which you'd not have in Ireland. Now at home you would never be in a room with a justice of the supreme court and chatting familiarly with him."

"But, sure, sir," said Mary, quite in earnest, "you'd never be a judge at home." — Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Love Letters to a Soldier

Transcribed by Marguerite Moore Marshall.

Donald, dead, I, too, have enlisted for the war.

That is the plan about which I promised to tell you in my last letter. First, I wanted to make sure that I could do the thing I have come to desire. The beginning of it, at least, is accomplished, for I have obtained a job in the Necropolis Bank. The young man who was doing my work has enlisted, so that, in a way, I have set free another soldier for America. (Perhaps it is my vanity, but I like to feel that I helped to set you free, dear one—at least, that I did not try to hinder you with the chains of my love.)

Unless I am discharged as incompetent, I shall not give up my job before the end of the war. Do you know that, all over New York, young women who never in their lives have worked for money are acting as I have done? I cannot say what swept them out of the charmed channels of ornamental idleness. But I am perfectly aware of what changed me, Donald. It is you.

This is what has happened, inside of me, since you went to war. First, I exulted vicariously in your splendid service to our mother, America. I am afraid somehow I persuaded myself that to me belonged a part of your glorious achievement. For so long women have considered that they stand or fall according to the erect or prostrate attitude of their men.

When I was invaded by a certain restless questioning, "Yes, he is everything you think," an insistent little voice assured me. "Yes, he is brave and strong and dedicated to service. But what of you—you? It is enough for you to hang flowers on his altar? The war has made of the pleasant young business man you loved a hero with a flaming sword. What will it make of you?"
