original number attest the desperate valor with which the confronted death. Not with the rank and file is the blame! The leading! There has been the secret of failure. With all the advantages of a just cause over our enemies, we have suffered them to outdo us in earnestness. We lack the enthusiasm which made irresistible the charge of Cromwell's Ironsides. We need the invincible impulse of a sentiment. We want, above all, leaders who know and feel what they are fighting for. This is a war in which mercenaries avail not. There must be a higher motive than the pay of a Swiss—a holier duty urging on, than the professional pride or the blind obedience of a soldier. By parliamentary usage, a proposed measure is entrusted, for fostering care, to its friends. So should the war be. Its conduct should be confided to men whose hearts and souls are in it.

Again. It has long been one of our national sins, that we pass by, with scarcely a rebuke, the gravest public offenses. We utterly fail in holding to a strict accountability our public men. The result of such failure, in peace, had almost escaped our notice. In war, we have now beheld its effects, flagrant and terrible. It was not to be expected that among so many thousands of officers, suddenly appointed, there should not be some hundreds of incompetents. Such things must be. No one is to blame if, in field or garden, weeds spring up. The blame rests with him who leaves them there to choke the crop and cumber the ground.

Accountability—that should be the watchword—ACCOUNTABILITY, stern, unrelenting! Office has its emoluments; let it have its responsibilities also. Let us demand, as Napoleon demanded, success from our leaders. The rule may work harshly. War needs harsh rules. Actions are not to be measured in war by the standard of peace. The sentinel, worn by extreme fatigue, who sleeps at his post, incurs the penalty of death. There is mercy in courts martial—drum-head courts-martial. A dozen officers shot, whenever the gravity of the offense demands it, may be the saving of life to tens of thousands of brave men.

Eighteen months have passed. Eight hundred millions have been spent. We have a million of armed men in the field. More than a hundred thousand rest in soldiers' graves. And for all this, what result? Is it strange if sometimes the heart sinks and resolution fails at the thought that, from sheer administrative infirmity, the vast sacrifice may have been all in vain? But let the Past go! Its fatal faults (difficult, perhaps, to avoid, under an effort so sudden and so vast) can never be recalled. Doubtless they had their use. It needed the grievous incapacity we have witnessed, the stinging reverses we have suffered, the invasion even of free States that we have lived to see commenced; it needed the heatombs of dead piled up unavailingly on battlefields after battlefields—the desolate hearths, the broken-hearted survivors—it needed all this to pave the way for that emancipation which is the only harbinger of peace.

The Future! that is still ours to improve. Nor, if some clouds yet rest upon it, is it without bright promise. Signs of nascent activity, energy, and a resolution to hold accountable for the future the leaders of our armies, are daily apparent. Better than all, the initiative in a true line of policy has been taken. The twenty-third of Sept. has had its effect. The path of safety is before us: steep and rugged, indeed, but no longer doubtful or obscure. A lamp has been lit to guide our steps; a lamp that may burn more brightly before a new year dawns upon us. The noble prayer of Ajax has been vouchsafed in our case. At last we have light to fight by.

We shall reach a quiet haven if we but follow faithfully and perseveringly that guiding light. There is, at this moment, in the hearts of all good men throughout the length and breadth of the land, no deeper feeling, no more earnest longing, than for peace; peace, not for the day, not to last for a few years; but peace on a foundation of rock, for ourselves and our children after us. May the hearts of our rulers be opened to the conviction that they can purchase only a shambling counterfeit except at one cost! God give them to see, ere it be too late, that the price of enduring peace is general emancipation!

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
ROBERT DALE OWEN.

DEPARTERS FROM THE REBEL ARMY.—We learn from the Memphis Bulletin of the 26th, that every day deserters from the rebel army are coming into that city and taking the oath of allegiance to the National Government. The day before, seventeen reported themselves at the Provost Marshal's office, and having taken the oath were allowed to return to their homes. There is scarcely any more hopeful sign of the manner in which the mass of the Southern people regard the rebellion than the fact that so many of those who have been forced or deluded into the service of rebellion, are now fleeing to the Federal lines for protection against the oppressions and outrages of the rebel authorities.

A shoemaker Knoxville the other day charged $30 for a pair of boots. He was immediately conspired for extor-

What Andy Johnson has to Answer for.

We have been furnished with a letter from GIBSON J. PILLOW Jr., to his father, which was found by a Federal soldier in Tennessee. It was written immediately after the election of A. O. P. NICHOLSON to the United States Senate from that State, for which place it seems that young GIBSON'S "Pa" was a candidate, whose defeat is laid to the charge of ANDY JOHNSON, the noble Union Democrat of Tennessee. Whether the "debt of revenge" spoken of by the amiable junior has ever been liquidated, is not known but the pledge to pay it is couched in language eminently divulsi. Read it:

HOMER, Nov. 1st, 1857.
DEAR GEORGE—I have delayed writing you this long in order that I might give you the election news, and since the election I have not had the heart to write, for in so doing I had to announce our defeat. You have doubtless heard ere this, that Nicholson was elected to the Senate. But had not Johnson the infernal demagogue, the damned perjurer villain interloper, Pa would have been elected with ease. I owe the dog a debt of revenge which I may never be so fortunate as to have the pleasure of paying; but it shall accumulate at compound interest. As things stood before his interference, Pa would have been nominated on the first ballot.

Very Truly, Your Brother,
G. J. PILLOW, JR.

Singular Death of a Scotch Miser

The Edinburgh Courier says: Last week there died in the Fever Hospital, Dunfermline, a man fifty-five years of age, named Andrew Hutton, better known in the western district of Fife as the "African Chief." For a number of years he has lived in the most miserly manner, hardly allowing himself enough of food to sustain life, and the little he did take was of the coarsest description. Many amusing stories are told of his parsimonious habits. The immediate cause of death was eating the leaves of ash trees. He had been walking along the edge of a field bordered by these trees, on the fallen leaves of which the cows were feeding greedily. He thought the animals seemed fat, and that if the leaves were good for them they could not be bad for him. He accordingly gathered a quantity and took them home, and after boiling them, fed on them for several days. The consequence was that he was taken ill and removed to the hospital, where he died after some days of great suffering. On searching his house after death the relatives came upon an old tea-caddy, in which was found a cheque for £70, the interest on which had been accumulating for seventeen years, and a book showing a balance of £61 at his credit in the National Security Savings Bank. Several £1 notes and a great quantity of loose money in half-crowns, shillings and smaller coins were also found in the most out-of-the-way places. Hutton was also possessed of considerable property in Dunfermline. He was a great reader, and well versed in several languages.

Shoddy Explained.

A London correspondent of the New York World writes: "You have heard not a little about 'shoddy.' Mr. J. Rhodes, of Merley, near Leeds, England, exhibits in the International Exhibition a compact machine for performing the first process toward converting old rags into new cloth. The stuff here produced is called 'Mungo,' a better kind of 'devil's dust.' The fibres of the latter is extremely short, so short as to give it the name of dust. The mungo is larger fibered. It enters largely into the composition of all the commoner cloths now made in England, and Mungo may be said to be the principal wear of seventeenth of the English people. Anybody who buys a ten dollar suit buys mungo. The rags being cut in pieces three or four inches square, and placed in the hopper of the rag-grinding machine, are torn in shreds and gradually torn into short fibres by means of strong toothed combs which cross one another, rollers and blowers. Thus it comes out, not unlike cotton batting, or more like the fluff which accumulates in the corner of your pocket, being the soft surface rubbed off the material of which your pocket is composed. Then it passes into piercing machines, slubbing horses, billyes, tenderhook woolleys, and shake woolleys, and finally comes out, 'this sir,' as the man in charge of the machine said, taking me by the sleeve of my black broadcloth coat to my extreme disgust. Alas, alas, who ever more may put his trust in tailors?"

The Augusta (Ga.) Sentinel of Nov. 10 says—John C. Cole, a refugee from Missouri, has invented a machine for making percussion caps, which exceeds anything of the kind either North or South.

Its superiority consists in the manner in which the cap is cut from and formed at a single operation. It is capable of making by hand 100 per minute, and by steam 104,000 per day.

The girls in New Hampshire are as good as they are pretty, which is high praise. Fourteen of them went the other night to the house of an aged farmer in Brentwood who had sent three sons to the war, and husked one hundred bushels of corn for him.
