

MURDER IN NEW YORK.

LA Men Murders His Mistress, and Attempts to Cut His Own Throat. The residence of Miss Amanda Cutler, No. 225 Prince, was last night the scene of one of the most cowardly and brutal murders of which the annals of crime give any account. Miss Cutler has furnished rooms to let to ladies and gentlemen, with board only for the lady. The victim of the dastardly crime was Miss Kate Smith, one of the occupants of her furnished room. The man who perpetrated the crime had, since the coming of Miss Smith to board there, been in the habit of sharing her room with her, and getting his meals elsewhere after the most approved style. Kate had been there since the first of May, and shown herself a quiet, orderly girl, and paid her board promptly. She was about twenty-nine years of age, and came from Providence to New York.

JERRY O'BRIEN, the murderer, is a native of Ireland, and gives his age as nineteen, though he is believed to be much older than that. He has been an enthusiastic Fenian, and was one of the adventurous spirits who advanced to the frontier when the war-cry was sounded against Canada. That enterprise proved a failure, he returned to his city only to find his possessions made desolate, and that the invader, grown insolent with triumph, was boasting of the conquests he had made. The heart of Kate had been torn away from its old fastenings in the absence of O'Brien, and given to Jesse Allen, a notorious thief living in that vicinity.

AN ASSAULT. Goaded by jealousy, O'Brien had no sooner returned than he resolved to avenge himself for the wrongs he had suffered. He sought not, however, to wreak his vengeance upon the man who brought upon him his woe, but upon the unfortunate victim of his passion, whom he had no money to support. On Saturday night of last week he met her upon the street, and assailed her with a club or knife, with the intention of killing her. But in this he was thwarted by the timely interference of the police, by whom he was arrested, and conveyed about half-past 12 o'clock to the Eighth Precinct Station House. The girl made a charge against him of assault and battery, which was to have been tried last Tuesday, but Kate failed to appear against him. Yesterday he was released on giving bail to appear to-day, when he was to have been tried.

THE CAUSE. The reason why O'Brien was sent adrift by Kate was that he had no money for her; and as Jesse Allen was very munificent in the bounties bestowed upon her, she naturally preferred Allen, and as naturally refused to have anything further to do with O'Brien. To all the entreaties of O'Brien, which were many, she turned a deaf ear; for all his protestations of love, which he declared to be great, she would not believe; by all his insinuations of the dark crime now committed, which he did not attempt to conceal, she was not shaken in the least from her stubborn resolve. She could not be induced to revoke her decision; no more could he. Not being able to have her himself, he was determined that his rival should have her no longer. No sooner was he released from confinement yesterday than he began to cast about him to see how the fatal deed might be accomplished.

NOW IT WAS DONE. In the vicinity of the scene of the tragedy is a fish market. The monstrous knives that fishermen use for hacking to pieces their merchandise are well known to everybody. By some means or other—how, is a profound mystery now—O'Brien got possession of one of those knives. It is a frightful thing to look at when one thinks of its being plunged into human flesh and of its dripping with human gore. Armed with this knife O'Brien was prepared for his work. The next step was to get at his victim. He has means ready at hand and a cool ready to do his bidding. The means was a letter; the tool a broad-bladed knife, who was to convey it to her. He took it and went to the house of Miss Cutler, rang the basement bell, and sent up the letter. All that was desired to know was found out. Kate was in. O'Brien has a night key. Unknown to any one he sneaks up stairs with his huge knife concealed in his clothing.

He opens the door to the little attic room where Kate slept, and found her at her toilette. Her only garments were a chemise and a single skirt. Soon there were heard by the girls on the floor below words wrung from a heart tremulous with fear and wild despair. They went to the room. The poor girl was upon her knees before the monster begging for her life. "Don't, don't! I am a bad girl. You know I am not fit to die. For God's sake don't kill me!" Such were her words. Here half a dozen voices broke in. "Run, Kate, run! run for your life!" Quick as a startled fawn Kate sprang to her feet, eluded her foe, bounded out the door, fled down the first staircase, and was about to go down the next when the fiend by a sudden leap overtook her, plunged the great knife into her back so far that it appeared at the breastbone, and she fell headlong upon the landing and almost instantly expired.

AFTER THE DEED the murderer scratched his neck a little with the knife, and laid down on the floor with a rue under his head and forehead to be dead. But he soon made it appear that he was not quite gone, for on the appearance of Captain Mills he rose to his feet, and began to show fight. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, but will be given up to-day. Captain Miller has a commitment for him, which will be entered this morning.

THE LETTER to which allusion has been made is given below. In fifteen minutes after it was sent Kate lay upon the stairs bleeding with a mortal wound.

KATE—I was down to court for trial yesterday and it was put off till to-morrow; and Billy Roomer's girl told me that you got subpoenaed this subpoena don't amount to nothing; only to see whether you want to make a charge against me or not; and you know Kate that whenever I told you a thing I never lived only the night I bit you and you howed you told me that you did not do anything; so when I mean you and Jesse I was crazy I did not know what I did; I have found out that girl went and told you that I stand with Topsy and when you heard I how how you felt you left just as I did and you went to get settled and still you thought never liked you; there you was wrong; but let that pass. Now on to what I will let you again; Kate I never will let you see it now; but for me to try and live with a girl that don't want me; but as for me going with that bitch Topsy only she is so small for shame's sake I would break her back. Kate I never let so in my life as I do now for hitting you, and making a fool of myself; but it is all done and it can be helped; I don't think you want with Jesse because you wanted to do so; but it was because you thought I stand with Topsy. Kate don't come down to court to-morrow for my sake; and if you ever did love me let me know so, as I will stand trial. I will wait for an answer right away, all I can say I am sorry it happened. So, Kate, I hope you will answer me. JERRY O'BRIEN. Give the boy the answer.—N. Y. Herald.

Letter from a "Southern Gentleman." The following appears in the Galveston News:—"I have been informed to-night that it has been currently reported, and believed, that there is a general officer of the late Confederate Army now at the Island City House, who has solicited an appointment from the President an appointment under the United States Government. I believe there are but two persons at the hotel answering this description, General N. G. Evans, of South Carolina, and Capt. U. D. the part of both of us, I deny this report. I believe I can say for General Evans, as for myself, that we have at no time held any intercourse with persons of the vocation to which, I am informed, Mr. Johnson belongs, except in relation to the making or repairing of clothes.

Respectfully, "ARTHUR PENDLETON BAGBY, 'Of the late Confederate Army.' Napoleon is said to be very anxious to receive Lamartine from his pecuniary difficulties. He has offered to assume Lamartine's liabilities, amounting to 3,000,000 francs, and to pension him with 40,000 francs annually for life. But Lamartine must abandon to the State his copyrights, estates, and personal property, and it is doubtful if he accepts the imperial offer.
